MISSISSIPPI
White Sulphur Springs.

THE proprietor of this Watering Place takes this method of announcing to the public, that he is now prepared to receive visitors, having erected a large and commodious building since the last season.

These Springs are situated in the west of Copiah county, about thirteen miles from Gallatin, and twenty-five from Port Gibson, on the most direct route, or twenty-seven miles via Brandywine Springs, being seven miles from the latter place, in a high, and justly reputed the most healthy part of the state; abounding with the finest water, game, &c. and in the bosom of an intelligent and respectable community. There are several places of Religious Worship within five or six miles, and a Post-Office within three miles.

The Table will be furnished with the best the country affords; the Bar supplied with a well selected variety of wines and other liquors; and having the best of servants and ostlers, with plenty of forage, &c. &c. nothing will be omitted to make the stay of such as may visit the White Sulphur Springs comfortable.

As these waters have never been submitted to proper tests for analysing them, it is impossible to point out their constituent elements. The proprietor therefore can only say, that the most scientific persons who have visited them unite in the belief, that they contain Sulphurated Hydrogen Gas, in combination with Iron, Soda and Magnesia. There are, however, a great variety and abundance of waters, among which are several springs, pronounced by gentlemen of the first respectability, and who have visited all the celebrated watering places in Virginia, to possess similar properties to the White Sulphur Springs of that state.
