BREAKS THE RECORD.

COTTON QUOTATIONS EXCEED PREVIOUS ONES OF THIS SEASON.

Buyers and Factors Seem to Agree Now on a Very Short Crop.

Cotton on yesterday reached the highest quotation which has been given in the American markets this season. Not only was the day a record breaker for this season, but not since 1889-90 had the average price per pound in New York equaled the quotation which was given yesterday. Middling was quoted there at 9 3/8c and the price which the committee of the Memphis exchange agreed upon was 8 15-16c. It is believed by the majority of the factors here, and the opinion is shared in by the buyers, that today will see the quotation reach 9c in Memphis. Futures in New York closed up 20 points.

Some of those who were on the floor yesterday and discussed the remarkable advance in the market were inclined to the idea that its condition was the result of manipulation, but further than their belief they had little to say.

The facts, as they have so far been ascertained, supported the conclusion of the other members who insisted that the high prices were due to the indication of a 6,500,000 bale crop, which is fast taking on the character of certainty, together with the prospect of unusual activity in cotton manufactures during the coming year. The dullness which has existed in the cotton goods market for the past two or three years, now that improvement in all other lines of business is becoming manifest, must be followed by increased activity and heavy purchases. Knowing this fact the consumers are realizing, and so are the speculators, that to meet this coming great demand the factories have probably the shortest crop since 1892-93.

Up to within the past few days the purchases of cotton have been made chiefly by the speculative class, who believed the staple would reach higher figures. The buyers for consumption held off, believing the quotations that were current would not be sustained by the receipt of reliable or final information relative to the size of the American crop. Yesterday's transactions throughout the country, however, indicate very strongly that the consensus of market opinion, both of buyers and sellers, is coming rapidly to the short crop estimates. Consumers have evidently entered the market, many of them convinced that there will be no decline in prices, and from now on it is believed they will buy largely.

A remarkably wide diversity of opinion as to the size of the crop has existed this year, and that itself naturally tended to keep the market feverish. But when there is added to that diversity of opinion the knowledge that, owing to the coming unusual demand upon the consumers for manufactures, a difference of even a quarter of million bales in the crop would have an immense effect, it can be readily seen how the feverish condition of the market has been intensified, and the tendency to receive and be affected by any all crop reports has been strengthened. Neill's probable statement of a short crop, which it was rumored yesterday would come today, was in a large measure responsible for the advances.—Commercial Appeal.
