

"Pull up another
chair"

Pull up another chair at the table this Thanksgiving and have a little fellow for your guest that you've never seen and probably never will. He will look about like one of your own, with a shock of brown hair, big blue eyes and a batch of freckles on his nose. The only difference will be that he won't have any real honest-to-Pete father to carve a turkey for him. He'll have to depend on you.

If you really want to meet this Thanksgiving dinner guest, come down and see us, and we'll be glad to arrange an introduction. If you haven't time, just send us a check. We'll see that the chair is pulled up and the turkey carved.

Here's the check. You carve the turkey.

Story and Play Time

Hello Boys and Girls,

Are you having fun these lazy fall days? I hope so, for otherwise, you might be like the airplane in our story today who got into a lot of trouble because he was discontented. Just wait until you read about what happened to him. I'll bet you are glad you're you!

SKYRIDER

SKYRIDER was a little trainer plane. All day long he sailed over the airfield, helping young pilots learn to fly. Around and around he flew, never getting very far from the field, and at last one day Sky-rider got tired of it.

"I wish something exciting would happen for a change," he growled. "This is no fun!"

And then, quite by accident, Sky-rider learned he could fly by himself. When a student pilot took him up for the first time, he began to experiment.

When the pilot wanted to go left, Skyrider turned right. When the pilot tried to go up, Skyrider pointed his nose toward the ground; and when the pilot tried to come down, Skyrider zoomed toward the clouds.

The poor pilot was frightened half out of his wits. "What do you mean sending me up in a plane that flies like this?" he shouted at the mechanic when he had landed. "The controls are frozen!"

"Take it easy," soothed the mechanic. "You made a perfect landing. You couldn't do that with frozen controls."

"I landed O.K. But that's the only thing I did right. Every time I tried to bank left, we went right. When I tried to go down, we went up. I tell you, something is wrong!"

"Well, I'll check it over," said the mechanic, still in doubt.

Skyrider laughed as he listened to the argument. This was fun. And when the mechanics could find nothing wrong with him, he was gleeful. He could stump them all.

The next day he was allowed to fly again—and again the same thing happened. This went on for several days, and each pilot who flew Sky-rider reported his strange actions.

Then, one day, a strange car arrived at the airport, and several men got out. When they came over to him, Skyrider became a little uneasy. The men thumped his wings and his body. They explored his motor, inch by inch. Then they worked the controls.

At last one of the men said: "I'm satisfied that nothing is wrong with this plane. I'll take it up on trial and see what happens."

"Ho, ho," thought Skyrider. "Now I'll really have some fun."

Then Skyrider pointed his nose up and began to climb. Up and up he went, until his motor coughed a warning. At the same time he felt the pilot relax at the controls and he was frightened. He had heard of pilots "blacking out." Perhaps he had gone too far this time. He came down as fast as he dared—and breathed a sigh of relief when he knew that the pilot was flying him again.

Back at the field, the angry test pilot called Skyrider a "menace" and said that he must be rebuilt. So the little plane was torn apart and all the pieces were sent back to the factory. And when he was finally back together again, you may be sure, Skyrider flew just the way he should.

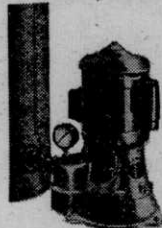

Have a nice Thanksgiving everyone,
AUNT SALLY.

Are Your Chickens Wheezing, Choking?

Chickens do not die from so-called "colds" but death results from strangulation caused by accumulation of sticky, choking mucus (phlegm) in the breathing passages. This phlegm must be removed if bird is to survive.

Read the letter from Thomas Pulliam, a Kentucky poultryman: "I have had birds choking, strangling, and with their eyes closed from common colds and have saved them all. One cockerel was nearly dead. He lost 5 pounds. I applied Group-Over, and in two weeks he was full of pep and fighting every rooster on the place."

Why don't you try Group-Over on your flock? It's easily used. See for yourself how the Group-Over treatment helps bring needed relief. For a liberal supply, send 50¢ (or $1 for the extra large size) to Burrell-Dueger Co., 227 East South St., Dept. G5, Indianapolis 25, Ind. Group-Over must satisfy you perfectly or your money refunded.
