A drunken loafer made Central avenue blue one day this week with obscene blasphemy. In the presence or hearing of decent people and especially of ladies, this should not be permitted. A pair of public spirited citizens removed him out of sight and hearing. Public sentiment is against it, and public decency forbids such vile public exhibitions.

Quite a large crowd assembled on the river bank near the dam to witness the passage of the ice down stream. It was a grand sight to see the immense blocks of ice tumble over the dam, grinding, crunching, splitting, tons of it piling over one another. The ice gorge several miles up the river is now completely gone. As it came down it carried with it a great number of logs and railroad ties of which but few could be saved from out the sea of whirling cakes.
