What Major Grantland
Argued and Then Offered

I bowed to Maj. Grantland in a rather perfunctory manner. I am afraid, for I was about the last person I desired to see.

My trip north threatened to have enough complications, owing to Dicky's disapproval, without adding anything else. Could his presence at the railroad station mean that he was also going north on the night train? I sincerely trusted not.

I did not mind facing whatever discomforts or dangers might come to me on my own, but it would be intolerable to feel that I was a burden and a responsibility to some one else. And that I would be both to Hugh Grantland when he learned that I was traveling alone through the railroad strike zone. I was certain. I knew his chivalry, his Puritan conscience, and his more or less concealed opinion that women were the weaker sex, certain to come to grief unless protected by strong masculine arms.

He lifted his hat in a manner equally casual, but made his way at once to my side.

"This is a pleasant surprise," he said holding out his hand. "I had no idea you were here. Have you been here in Southern Cedars for a little stay? How is it that I have missed you?"

For an instant I was tempted to foster the idea he had conceived. But I knew that any chance moment might bring the knowledge of the truth to him, and I did not especially care for the look I would see in Hugh Grantland's face when he should learn my cheap subterfuge.

"Probably because I haven't been here," I laughed, answering his last question first. "I just motored over from Cedar Crest a few minutes ago."
"Oh!" He uttered the monosyllable as if it were an expletive, then added incidentally:

"Of course your husband is here, but I don't see him."

"I Am Going!"
His assured manner annoyed me. I spoke shortly, crisply:
"Dicky is at Cedar Crest."
"That he was both astonished and upset, I knew, although his manner was as impassive as ever."
"Then may I not be of service to you?
I suppose you wish to make sure of reservations when the strike is over, but I am afraid you are doomed to vexatious delay. They are promising nothing."
"They are selling tickets as far as Richmond, are they not?" I asked innocently.

He started perceptibly. I saw it, and I rejoiced childishly that his perfect poise had been shaken, if only for a fleeting second.

"Yes, but surely Mrs. Graham, you cannot mean—"

"That I am going just as far as this railroad will carry me, and walk, drive, motor, trolley or fly the rest of the way to New York," I returned, with, I am afraid, a note of pettishness in my tone. "That is exactly what I mean, Maj. Grantland, and if you will pardon me now, I think I see my chance at the ticket window."

He lifted his hat and stepped back at once, as I stepped to a vacant place at the window. The line of people, and I with it, had been gradually moving up as we talked, and I was prompt to seize the first opportunity of questioning the ticket agent.

Grantland Telephones.
"Tickets only as far as Richmond," the man repeated mechanically, but he came to life as I put down some bills and asked for a lower berth.

"It's just to Richmond you want to go, isn't it, lady?" he asked. "You're not thinking of going on to New York, because if you are it's my duty to warn you."

"Thank you," I said shortly. "I will take care of the situation at Richmond.
I'd like my berth near the end of the car in which the women's dressing room is situated."
"You can have pretty near anything you like," he said, a trifle ironically.
"There won't be much competition for seats on this train." He handed me the pieces of paper and pasteboard, and the change from my bills. As I stepped out of the line, Major Grantland was at my side, his hand extended.

"Do you mind letting me see if you have secured a good berth?" he said. "I happen to know this railroad game, you know."
I held them out mechanically. He scrutinized them carefully, almost as if he were memorizing the numbers—was he doing that very thing, I wondered?
Then he handed them back with a little bow.

"Fortunately, they are perfectly correct," he said. "And now, how may I serve you? I have a car here. May I drive you back to Cedar Crest?"
"As I am not going back to Cedar Crest I am afraid I shall have to decline your very kind invitation. But if you will give me the name of a good hotel here, where I can stay until tonight, I shall be very grateful."
"I will have my man drive you over to the best one at once," he responded.
"And I will do myself the pleasure of calling upon you there later in the day, just now I have some urgent business to attend to."
He summoned his chauffeur and helped me into a luxurious car. As the man started the engine I caught sight of Hugh Grantland hurrying into a telephone booth. I wondered idly what his urgent business could be.

for Madge."
