Vertical Integration

keting has been mentioned as a real potential in the Northern Great Plains area.

Dairy Industry. The dairy industry is already highly integrated. Milk is produced on a quota system and prices are regulated through the Montana Milk Control Board. The uncertainty caused by poor relationships between consumers, producers, and processors may cause further integration in this industry.

For example, milk processors in some areas have considered the possibility of consolidating milk production for their plant on one or possibly two farms. This could be done by outright ownership of the farm, or through contract.

Poultry. The egg business in Montana represents a good example of the need for integration. The egg producers of Montana produce a surplus during the fall and early winter months. This depresses prices. Then during the months of June and July Montana egg production falls off. It is precisely at this time that the greatest demand for eggs occurs in Montana largely as a result of the tourist trade at that time.

During these months suppliers are forced to go to out-of-state sources to obtain eggs. Many of the contracts with out-of-state producers are maintained on a year-round basis in order to guarantee a constant supply of a quality product. This in turn aggravates the surplus situation in the fall and early winter months.

It is obvious that more coordination is needed in this industry. Perhaps it can be achieved through vertically integrated arrangements.

IN LIGHTER VEIN

Pat and Mike were dining together. When the fish arrived, Pat took the larger piece. "Foine manners ye have," said Mike. "If I'd reached out first, I'd have taken the smaller piece." "What's ailin' ye?" Pat asked "you've got it, ain't ye?"

A driver got stuck behind a big semi-trailer truck on the highway and couldn't pass. What's more, the truck driver would stop every 4 or 5 miles and bang on the back of his truck. Finally, after 100 miles of this, the truck pulled up to a stop sign and the driver following, jumped out and ran up to the truck cab. "Mister, I'm not normally nosey, but I've been following you for miles and want to know why you stop every few miles and bang on that truck."

"Well, I'll tell you," the truck driver answered, "I've got a 2-ton capacity truck here and I'm carrying 4 tons of canaries, so I gotta keep 2 ton of them on the wing."

Museum Guide: "Now that I've shown you all through the museum, are there any questions you ladies would like to ask?"

Voice from the rear: "Yes, can you tell me what kind of wax you use to keep these floors so shiny?"

A German was the guest of a Frenchman who asked him how they distinguish between an optimist and a pessimist in Gemany.

"It's very simple," replied the German. "The optimists are learning English and the pessimists are learning Russian."
