

CRUISER DETROIT TO HASTEN TO SAN DOMINGO

Insurgents Are Attacking the City—Powell May Be Called Upon.

Washington, Dec. 31.—Cabling under date of today from Port of Spain to the navy department, Admiral Lambertson states that he has ordered the cruiser Detroit to Santo Domingo to relieve the Scorpion, which was ordered there yesterday.

City Under Fire.

San Domingo, Dec. 31.—The provisional government has captured two vessels from Curacao which were carrying arms and ammunition for the insurgents. The vessels were brought to this port and 15 prisoners landed. The insurgents who attacked General Guerrero have been defeated and several prisoners taken. There was fighting yesterday morning between government troops and insurgents outside the city.

A New Way of Using Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

Mr. Arthur Chapman, writing from Durban, Natal, South Africa, says: "As a proof that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is a cure suitable for old and young, I pen you the following: A neighbor of mine had a child just over 2 months old. It had a very bad cough and the parents did not know what to give it. I suggested that if they would get a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and put some upon the dummy teat the baby was sucking it they would cure the child. This they did and brought about a quick relief and cured the baby." This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL

Rodgers' Attorney Hopes to Be Able to Prove an Alibi.

Affidavits in support of a motion for a new trial were filed yesterday by Attorney William Meyers on behalf of Joe Rodgers, convicted recently in Judge McCleary's court of burglarizing the Kavacovich residence on East Broadway.

Mr. Meyers claims to be able to prove Rodgers' whereabouts from June 16 to the time he returned to Butte, and will show that Rodgers could not have been in Butte on the date he is alleged to have committed the burglary.

FILE AMENDED COMPLAINT

SPECIAL TO THE INTER MOUNTAIN.

Missoula, Dec. 31.—Counsel for the plaintiffs in the case of B. A. Claud A. and Vivian A. Tozier vs. A. M. Stevens have filed an amended complaint, by permission of the supreme court, in their suit for a bill of $67,650, alleging that between January 1 and May 10, 1932, at Missoula, the plaintiff sold and delivered to the defendant, through C. T. McCulloch, his agent at the Grass Valley ditch, lumber approximating this amount, McCulloch writing an order for the money on the firm of A. M. Stevens & Co. at Missoula, which A. M. Stevens, the defendant, O. K. D. and turned over to J. W. Wilson for presentation to McCulloch, who also agreed that the bill was right. The plaintiffs claim principal and interest from May, 1932, to date.

MURDERER IS READY

SAYS HE KNOWS WHAT HAS TO COME AND WANTS TO HAVE IT OVER WITH SOON.

BY ASSOCIATED PRESS. Salt Lake City, Utah, Dec. 31.—Frank Rose, the St. Louis barber who murdered his wife on Christmas day and left his 2-year-old child alone and without food for two days in the blood-stained bed with its dead mother, was taken before Judge Diehl yesterday at his own request, and waived his right to preliminary examination.

"I know what is coming," said Rose. "I can see no use in lying around in jail. I want to get the thing over with as soon as possible."

Rose said he would plead guilty to murder when arraigned in the district court. He also said that if given the usual choice of shooting or hanging offered to condemned men in this state, he would elect to be shot.

INJUNCTION AGAINST THE INDIANAPOLIS STRIKERS

Indianapolis, Ind., Dec. 31.—Judge Carter, of the superior court, yesterday issued a temporary injunction against striking employes of the Indianapolis Foundry company, restraining them from interfering in any way with the operation of the plant. In doing so, the court quoted the words of John Mitchell, of the United Mine Workers, against lawlessness, that no good union man will ever be a law-breaker.

CANADIAN LEGISLATOR HAS COMMITTED SUICIDE

Toronto, Dec. 31.—Andrew Patullo, M. P., from Woodstock, Ontario, committed suicide Tuesday at London, England, where he had been visiting. By his death the majority of Premier Ross in the Ontario legislature is reduced to two, and the resignation of the government is possible.

ENJOINS OFFICIALS OF THE GOVERNMENT

Little Rock, Ark., Dec. 31.—Judge Jacob Tiber has granted a temporary injunction, restraining the officers of the interior department at Hot Springs from interfering with the patients of certain non-graduate physicians, who alleged that the government prevents them from prescribing to their patients the use of the hot waters on the government reservation.

MRS. INGERSOLL IS TO GO ON AND SUE

DECISION IN HER FAVOR IN UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT BACK IN BOSTON.

OLD DAVIS ESTATE ACTION

Widow of Orator Ingersoll Seeks to Recover for Legal Services Performed by Her Husband.

Boston, Dec. 31.—The United States circuit court yesterday made a decision in favor of Mrs. A. Ingersoll, administratrix of the estate of Robert G. Ingersoll, in an action against Joseph A. Coram and others to the effect that the plaintiff has a good lien on the property of the defendants on account of legal services rendered by Mr. Ingersoll.

The case involves about $149,000, alleged to be due the estate for services given by Mr. Ingersoll as attorney in settling the estate of the late millionaire Andrew J. Davis of Butte, Mont.

The court finds that the lien rests on an agreement between the defendants who inherited a part of the Davis estate and Mr. Ingersoll and not on the statutes of Montana, governing attorneys liens as ruled by Montana courts in a previous action.

The decision does not determine the amount due the plaintiff, but simply the question of lien. With this point settled the case will be presented on its merits before the United States circuit court.

The decision of the circuit court, holding in effect that Mrs. Ingersoll, wife of the late Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, has a good lien against the property of Joseph A. Coram and other Davis estate heirs, for legal services, means that she can now go ahead and sue the defendants for such services. Her case was once in the courts of Montana, but she was unsuccessful. Her attorney, E. N. Harwood, then began the action decided yesterday, in the federal court in Boston, where Coram and other defendants reside.

It has always been the contention of the defendants that they employed Ingersoll on a contingent fee, he to receive a certain sum providing he won the case. As the case was settled out of court and dismissed it was claimed that he was only entitled to a nominal fee of about $5,000. Attorneys and litigants generally will watch the outcome of the trial in Boston.

INTER MOUNTAIN'S DAILY SHORT STORY

THE TWO ONE-EYED MEN

BY JEAN RICHPAN.

(Copyrighted, 1903, by the Foreign Story Syndicate Co., Burlington, Vt.)

At that time, about 25 years ago, I lived at the top of the rue St. Jacques and every day, to earn my miserable bread, I was forced to go to the very end of the rue des Martyrs. Here I would spend the morning, and then after a hasty lunch at a cheap restaurant, return to my lodgings again.

I made both journeys upon foot, first out of purely economical reasons, and secondly, because I loved the exercise and the lazy sauntering of the walk home. After being a clerk for three hours on end, it was a pleasant relief to stretch my legs on the walk back and forth, and it was pleasanter still to regale my weary eyes with the ever changing aspects of the street.

Among these there were certain sights that never changed and which owed their special charm to their monotony alone. Regularly, every morning, a little before 9 o'clock, at one end of the rue des Martyrs, near a porte-cochere standing at the right, I would always meet a beggar to whom I gave a sou with an utterly mechanical gesture.

Not less regularly on my way home, about 2 o'clock, at the end of the rue St. Jacques, near a similar porte-cochere, but this time on the left, I met another beggar to whom I likewise gave a sou with the same mechanical gesture.

For a long time I noticed merely the analogous position chosen by both beggars, and I paid no attention to the men themselves, except for the fact that both had but one eye.

I will not seek to explain why, therefore, one fine day, I suddenly noticed that the beggar of the rue des Martyrs was blind in his left eye and the beggar of the rue St. Jacques was blind in his right eye. All I can say is, that after seeing them every day for several years, the fact suddenly struck my own eyes, if I may venture to express myself thus. From that day the two beggars interested me and as I stopped to toss them their daily sou, I began to examine them curiously. Imagine my surprise when I finally realized that the two men were strangely alike and yet unlike. The gentleman of the rue des Martyrs was, as I have said, blind in his left eye, and wore a heavy black overcoat of rough cloth and a cap that drew down over his ears, while he of the rue St. Jacques, who was blind in his right eye, was dressed in a lighter coat and a bell-shaped straw hat. But both had exactly the same countenance, so that you would have called them brothers and even twins.

I concluded at first that they must indeed be twins, and I reflected that fate had played a merry joke when she caused one to be blind in the right eye and the other in the left.

But a more careful scrutiny led me to believe that this apparent mystery was in reality but one and the same man, who took his place in the morning in the rue des Martyrs and in the afternoon in the rue Saint Jacques, merely changing his costume and shifting his blindness to the other eye. I was convinced I was not mistaken; the attitude, the gestures, the voice, and especially the appearance of the good eye, were, with both beggars, identically the same.

The one good eye had a most extraordinary look. Whether it was the left or the right, the expression remained the same, at once crafty and mocking. Evidently the eye of the rue des Martyrs and that of the rue Saint Jacques constituted a pair of eyes inhabited by a single soul.

There was no doubt that this pretended blind man was a clear case of make-up, a clever scoundrel. I did not bear him any ill-will, however, for his cleverness; I even thought he was so ingenious that I gave him two sous instead of one, deeming that he had earned them well.

But what was his reason, I wondered, for changing his blind eye? The problem bothered me, for I could not see any plausible explanation. Doubtless you wonder why I did not go and ask him directly. But why should I give pain to a miserable wretch by telling him that I had discovered the fraud by which he made his money? And I must confess that I felt a secret joy in saying to myself when I gave him the two sous:

"I suppose he takes me for a fool! Well, he is one, not I, since I have found out all about it."

One day, however, I could not restrain myself and I felt I must tell the old beggar that I had learned his secret. Let me add, however, that I robbed the act of its brutality by giving him at the same time a gift of 100 sous and wishing him a friendly good-morning.

"Well," I said to the beggar, "give me the key to this riddle that has been tormenting me for three weeks. Why the dickens are you blind first in one eye and then in the other?"

"Sir," he answered, "you seem to be a very good sort of a fellow and not the kind to spoil my industry. Consequently I will be perfectly frank with you. This is the whole root of the matter. Our business, you see, is just like any other; the more you practice, the more experience you gain and you learn by observing. Now, I have found out, in the first place, that the blind man's business is not so good as that of the one-eyed man. Why? I don't know, but that is the way it is. In the second place I have observed that there are people who are more charitable to those who are blind in the right eye and others who are equally more charitable to the left eye. Why? I don't know that either, but it's just the way it is. Finally, and this is where I have been the slyest; I have discovered, and I don't know the reason any more than for the other things, that a man blind in his right eye does better work on the left bank of the Seine and a man blind in his left eye succeeds better on the right bank. You can find out the reason why if you have time and think you can do it. As for me, I have given it up. I am satisfied to profit by my discovery and play the right-eyed man on the rue Saint Jacques and the left-eyed man on the rue des Martyrs."

He looked at me, with a glance that was more crafty and more mocking than ever, and then added:

"The joke of it is, you know, that I'm not one-eyed in either my right or my left eye."

"The dickens!" I cried, "you don't need to tell me that! What are you chuckling
