ORGANIZATION OF FARMERS' CLUBS IS NOW URGED

The Country Life Commission of Montana consisting of J. H. Durston, editor of the Anaconda Standard; F. S. Cooley, superintendent of farmers' institutes; M. L. Dean, state horticulturist; Mrs. C. E. Conrad of Kallispell, and Mrs. Mitchell of Great Falls, have been considering plans for the betterment of rural conditions in the state, and among the proposed measures is the organization of rural interests in farmers' clubs.

In many states the grange has proved a very effective, profitable and pleasant farmers' organization, and a great factor in rural advancement.

Farmers' clubs would be helpful in every farm community in Montana. By their means farmers and their families could get together at stated times during the slack season, enjoy social intercourse, discuss plans and methods for the coming seasons' work, receive information from the outside, read papers, or enjoy a program of music or fun, partake of refreshments together, and brighten and enlarge the life of every member of the community.

Why not start a farmers' club in your neighborhood this fall? Even a half dozen families would find it a profitable venture and the more the merrier. The farmers' institute will be glad to assist in getting any community organized. When the institute meets in your town, ask about it.

The following figures have been compiled under the direction of the different forest supervisors, and are reasonably correct:

and a half feet in length. Mr. Williams made his catch at Kootenai falls, about 12 miles below town. F. H. Kiser, official photographer for the Great Northern railway, was in town at the time with his special car and took a picture of the fish to add to the collection of Kootenai valley views which he is securing.

The falls of the Kootenai near here represent the head of navigation for the sturgeon—for the big fish do not seem to be able to get above this place.
