The school patrol was organized last week and the boys have taken up their duties, which include putting the silent sentinels out in the morning and taking them off the highway after school hours, patrolling the crossroads at noon and before and after school, and taking license numbers of any cars that speed through the school zone.

Ice from the Kootenai Chalet kept the refreshments cold, and wood supplied by the more ambitious players furnished fuel for a roaring bonfire, where the already overstuffed gang toasted marshmallows and brewed gallons of delicious coffee.

Among the thirty-seven persons present were Byron Fish, Seattle Times feature writer, his wife, Laurie, and friend Hank Taylor.
