The Montana fish and game department never claimed it owns the bears in this state. But one prospector in the Jardine district, whose name game officials withheld, believes it is responsible for them, anyway. He billed the department for slightly less than $2,000, claiming this amount of damage when bears broke into his cabin and ate or destroyed his winter supply of groceries.

Record State Wheat Storage Is Reported

Montana had a total of 71,449,000 bushels of wheat in storage Oct. 1, the largest amount in state history, the United States agricultural marketing service reports.

Of this total, the agency said, 16,229,000 bushels were stored in elevators and small flour mills, 4,627,000 in merchant flour mills, and 50,593,000 bushels on farms.

This large amount of wheat on hand, the marketing service said, was accounted for by the fact Montana's 1941 crop of 74,402,000 bushels was the third largest in state history, and the fact there was a large carryover from the 1940 crop.

During August, 17 state commercial flour mills with a daily milling capacity of 9,610 barrels of flour, ground 465,849 bushels of grain and produced 97,940 barrels. For the year from July 1, 1940 to July 1, 1941, the mills ground 4,948,283 bushels of wheat into 1,099,496 barrels of flour.

DAVID-GOLIATH BOUT RE-ENACTED IN INDIAN FIGHT

BLACKFEET CHIEF SLEW HIS BIG ADVERSARY; SON-IN-LAW OF DEAD MAN REAL WINNER

The battle of David and Goliath was re-enacted on the flats west of what now is the city of Lewistown when the Crows attempted to prevent the invasion of a band of Blackfeet Indians.

Reed's fort was the name of the station at the time of this conflict between the red men and it was in charge of Major Reed, for whom it was named, and a Bill Bowles.

Bowles was a squaw man and was married to a daughter of a Crow chief, Long Horse, whose band made its headquarters in the vicinity of the fort.

Perhaps Bowles was not married to this squaw in the conventional manner, as there was no one in that country legally capable of marrying them at that time. The usual way in those days was for a man to buy a girl from her father for a few bottles of whisky or some trade goods, stealing her, winning her in a horse race or in a poker game.

Major Reed never was a squaw man. It was not considered good etiquette in those days to ask a man where he came from, or where he was going. It simply wasn't done, and curiosity regarding such things was frowned upon and discouraged and brought one decided unpopularly. The major was a well-educated, gentlemanly man, who bore himself well, even when in his cups.

Long Horse Rallies Band

One day an Indian runner came to the fort and reported that a band of Blackfeet was coming that way from the north. As the Crows and Blackfeet were mortal enemies, Long Horse rallied his band, got all the white men he could to join him, made war medicine and went forth to meet the Blackfeet and give battle.

Now Long Horse was a tremendously big Indian, about 6 feet 8 or 10 inches tall, well proportioned and about the biggest, finest looking specimen of an Indian in the west. He rode a big, fine horse that weighed about 1,200 pounds—no cayuse or Indian pony could carry him.

The Crows and Blackfeet met on a creek east of Reed's fort, called Flat Willow, and the Blackfeet were told that this was Crow country and they must turn back, at which they laughed. There was, evidently, some pretty smart white men with the Crows and it was finally arranged between the two bands of Indians that the two chiefs, Long Horse and Weasel Calf, should fight between the two bands and whichever was victorious the other band should retire. The Crows and the smart white men had kept the big Long Horse and his fine saddle animal in the background. So each chief was armed with a lance, a knife, a tomahawk and a shield of dried buffalo hide and rode forth to fight and the Crows naturally expected that their man with his size and weight and strength and his big horse, would ride right over the smaller Weasel Calf and his cayuse.

David Wins Again

It was a kind of a David and Goliath performance, as it turned out. They both charged and both lances were caught on the buffalo hide shields and both chiefs were unhorsed and fell to the ground, but the Weasel's lance had pierced Long Horse's shield and gone through his body and stuck six inches out of his back and killed him, while the Weasel had suffered no injury except from the fall from his horse. He jumped up and ran to Long Horse with his knife in his hand to finish him, and saw that he was dead. He did not stop to scalp him but cut off one of his long braids of hair and held it up and gave the war-whoop, then ran back to his people.

Some of the young bucks among the Crows wanted to fight and avenge the death of Long Horse but it was pointed out to them that their medicine was probably bad that day and that they had better go home as agreed and make some good medicine and try it again another day. So they picked up Long Horse, laid him across the saddle and tied him on and started back with the body.

When they got back and the squaws had wailed over Long Horse for a couple of days and the medicine man had made the medicine to help him on his way to whatever place a dead Indian goes to, they finally built a platform up in a big cottonwood tree, wrapped Long Horse up in some buffalo robes and buried him up in the tree.

Long Horse, the father-in-law of Bill Bowles, remained buried up in the tree for a long time, until his bones were well bleached and sun and rain and snow and the elements had done their work.

One day along came a scientist from the University of Dublin, Ireland, named Dr. Jamison, whose brother conducted the famous Transvaal raid which brought on the Boer war.

The doctor was a great student of ethnology. He was browsing around one day he saw the platform up in the tree and climbed up to see what it was and found the bones of Long Horse in almost perfect condition except for a broken rib where the Weasel's spear had nicked him. He was struck with the tremendous size of the skeleton and its perfect proportions and said it was the most perfect specimen he had ever seen, so he got it down from the tree and carried it to his camp near the fort and bragged about it and what a great and perfect find he had made.

Settles for $300 and Horse

When Bill Bowles saw the skeleton and the size he at once suspected that it was that of his father-in-law, Long Horse. So he forked his cayuse and rode out to see and found that Long Horse was indeed gone from his usual place up in the tree, so he rode back to camp and just raised hob about the doctor stealing his father-in-law's bones and went on something scandalous about it.

The doctor must have been on to

Bill for after he had quieted down a little he tried to settle with him on a monetary basis for the skeleton—and nothing would help Bill's finer feelings except $500.

Dr. Jamison was a Scot and pretty canny himself, and after considerable dickering they compromised on $300 for the bones and Bill threw in an old pack horse, worth about $7, to pack out his father-in-law's bones and some other specimens the doctor had collected.

This is the most unique transaction in salesmanship that is on record. All kinds of salesmen brag about their sales but never one yet has sold his father-in-law's bones and a $7 cayuse for $300. Of course, if a man could brag that he had sold his mother-in-law's bones for $300, he would have it all over Bill, but no one heard of anything like that and nobody else ever did.

The doctor told the story about buying the bones and laughed about it, and a man named Clark, who was with the Crows on Flat Willow when Long Horse was killed, told about the battle.

Some years afterward Bill was sent to the penitentiary at Deer Lodge for stealing cattle. When he got out he was asked about Long Horse and he claimed he did pretty well off of Jamison. He said, "Where do you suppose old Long Horse is now? He's in Dublin. Did you ever hear tell of a Crow Indian being in Dublin, Ireland?"

9-MONTHS AUTO TOLL IS 27,860

YEAR'S TOTAL EXPECTED TO HIT 40,500, HIGHEST MARK EVER TO BE RECORDED

The National Safety council states that 27,860 men, women and children lost their lives as a result of motor vehicle accidents in the United States during the first three quarters of 1941.

The toll for the nine months was 17 percent greater than during a similar period last year.

During September 3,770 persons were injured fatally on streets and highways. It was the 14th consecutive month to show an increase over the corresponding month of the previous year but the size of the increase—14 percent—was the smallest since last January.

The urban safety leaders, with their annual death rate per 100,000 population as computed by the council, were ranked this way at the end of the first nine months of 1941:

Group 1 (more than 500,000 population)—Boston 8.6; Milwaukee 8.9; New York 9.9.

Group 2 (250,000-500,000)—Memphis 4.1; Providence 5.3; Kansas City 7.7.

Group 3 (100,000-250,000)—Omaha 4.8; Fall River, Mass., 6.9; Yonkers, N. Y., 7.5.

Group 4 (50,000-100,000)—Union City, N. J., 0; Cleveland Heights, O., 0; Wilkes-Barre, Pa., 1.5.

Among smaller cities with perfect records through the first three quarters were Chelsea, Mass.; Arlington, Mass.; Oshkosh, Wis.; Butler, Pa.; Fort Dodge, Ia., and Leominster, Mass.

Forty thousand five hundred deaths . . . 1,750,000 nonfatal injuries . . . $2,000,000,000 in economic loss . . .

That, according to authoritative sources, will be the traffic accident toll during the year. It will be the heaviest cost in life, limb and property in the history of highway transportation. Highest previous year was 1937 when death came to 39,643 persons and injury to more than 1,500,000 as the result of motor vehicle traffic accidents.

Soon initial steps are to be taken in the application of an emergency traffic law enforcement program developed by the nation's police chiefs, its mayors, prosecuting attorneys, judges and others having to do with the law and its administration.

65 Judges Required For Show at Chicago

When the 1941 international livestock exposition and horse show convenes in Chicago Nov. 29 to Dec. 6, it will require the services of 65 of the continent's leading livestock, horse show and farm crops judges to name the prize winners among the 12,000 or more farm animals and the hundreds of crops samples that will be exhibited at this year's show.

Those who will officiate in this capacity will come from 20 states and Canada, the management announces.
