100-OCTANE GAS PROGRAM RUSHED

Eighty per cent of the authorized projects in the 100-octane aviation gasoline program of the United Nations has been completed, Deputy Petroleum Administrator Ralph K. Davies announced this week.

One hundred and eighty-nine separate projects were involved in the program, of which 150 have now been completed. Seven of these were built in 1942, 71 in 1943 and 72 have been finished so far this year. Of the remaining units, 25 are expected to be ready this summer and the balance during the fall.

The engine of your postwar auto, according to Popular Science, may be serviced in much the same manner as your battery is charged now: a mechanic may jack up your car, trundle out your engine unit, replace it with a "rental," and let you drive away within 10 minutes.
