EVIDENCE NOT SUFFICIENT IN SLACKER CASE

beyond a reasonable doubt; first, that a crime has been committed; second, that the accused person committed the crime.

Admission Not Enough.

"Now, this always has been the law, that you cannot show that a crime has been committed by the mere admission of the charge. If a man were to come up tomorrow and say that 'out in the mountains I killed John Jones, feloniously, with malice aforethought and premeditatedly, he cannot be put on trial and convicted of the murder of John Jones by that admission; because, first, the government must prove that a crime was committed, and they would have to find the body of John Jones and prove that he was killed feloniously. If they did that, then there would be satisfactory evidence that a crime had been committed, and the admission of the man that did the killing would be competent evidence upon which a jury might find him guilty.

man's name did not appear on those records that would be proof that he had failed to register. That would be a crime. Along with that, they could use his admission that he did not register, and under those circumstances, if otherwise sufficient, they could use his admissions as to his age.

proof to him that he had registered. But congress has not done that. "These rules are not to protect the guilty persons, but to protect the innocent, and the experience of a thousand years of English law has shown those rules to be necessary and they cannot be invoked as against one person any more than against another. So the court will grant the motion, and a verdict of not guilty will be entered."
