THE LIME-KILN CLUB. A Mighty Cliche Shave.

After Samuel Shio had struck the triangle the usual six strokes, and Pickles Smith had got his dog made fast to the club safe, the president arose and asked: "Am Judge Staveaway Bulger in the hall this evening?"

"He are," was the answer from a spot near the water pump. "Den I would like to have you step for'd to de desk."

The judge advanced with apprehension in his eyes, and his knees knocking together, and when he had reached the desired position Brother Gardner continued: "Brudder Bulger, I iz reliably informed da a surgeon picked twenty-two bird shot out of your back de oder day."

"Yes, sah," "An' iz furder informed dat de said shot struck you while you war gallopin' down an alley on de Cass farm."

"J'zint so, sah." "An' de las' information am to de effect dat you didn't git de chickens you war arter."

"Chickens!" "Yes, chickens! When I say chickens I mean chickens. A sartin white man war watchin' a sartin unknown. A pusion to him unknown climbed de fence to accumulate poultry, but took fright an' started on a run. De gun went off arter him, an' some of it cotched him. Brudder Bulger, has you anything to say betw' de Committee on Harmony leads you to de head of the stars an' lets you drop?"

"I reckon I has, sah. I doan't deny dat I was shot in de back, an' I admit dat it war' in an alley, but I was done by a boy who was out huntin' rabbits. Yes, sah, an' he's den begged my pardon an' axed my forgiveness, an' he's gwine to pay all de expenses."

"Brudder Bulger, what am de name of dat boy?" "I—I has den forgot, sah." "An' might de time to hunt rabbits?" "Dat's de werry best time to hunt some kinds, sah."

"An' you wasn't arter chickens?" "Chickens! Why, de werry name of chicken makes me sick. I was lookin' arter my knife in de alley, an' I didn't find it."

The president scratched his ear for a minute, and then said: "I'd like a wote of de club on dis queshtun. Secratary, call de roll." The roll was called, and the vote stood: Guilty, 6; not guilty, 55. Elder Toots, being asleep, did not vote, and Samuel Shio asked to be excused on the ground that he loved the judge's half sister.

"Brudder Bulger, de club says no guilty," observed the president, "but it am such a powerful close shave dat I deem it my duty to warn you dat de nex' time anybody goes out rabbit huntin' an' takes you for a rabbit, your place in de club will be declared vacant in a tone of voice dat will make de cold chills center of' ar up to de back of yer neck. We will now confocate to de reg'lar order of bizness."

Do Not Be Deceived. In these times of quack medicine advertisements everywhere, it is truly gratifying to find one remedy that is worthy of praise, and which really does as recommended. The Seat Was Engaged. Drake's Traveller's Magazine. "Are you traveling alone?" asked a tall, agricultural looking gentleman, approaching a lady who occupied two seats in a crowded car. "No, sir," she replied. "May I ask who's with you?" asked the man, looking around vainly for some other place to store himself. "My husband," snapped the lady, with flashing eyes. "My husband is traveling with me."

"Oh! ah! excuse me," and the tall man straightened up and prepared to take a standing ride. "Is this seat engaged?" asked a dashing, well-dressed young fellow of the lady five minutes later. "No, sir," she replied, and down he plunged. "I say ma'am!" protested the tall man, "is that your husband?" "No, it isn't, and you needn't ask any more questions," retorted the woman.

"But you said you were traveling with him," persisted the tall man. "So I am," snorted the lady. "Where is he?" insisted the tall man. "He's in the baggage car in a coffin," replied the lady. "I beg your pardon, ma'am," said the tall man, "but I honestly beg pardon. I won't ask if he's dead, but you'll excuse me for thinking that if you and he have been married long he's deuced smart to travel around screwed up in a box, if you are on the same trip and it's likely to last long."

course and destitute of the sweetness and fine flavor necessary to make milk that would produce first class butter and cheese. They had much fault to find with the water supply. It was not sufficiently abundant, and the quality was not up to their standard. The air, too, was impure and often laden with malaria. The thought that butter and cheese could be produced here with some degree of profit, but that the articles produced would rank as greatly inferior to those made in settled regions, where nature and art had united in perfecting a country for dairying. They would be suitable to supply the aristocratic consumers in large cities but they might answer for common people who had not the means to purchase Orange county butter and cheese made in the valley of the Mohawk. They would, of course, sell for a very low price on account of their inferior quality.

A very short time has been sufficient to change public sentiment in regard to the dairy capabilities of the western states and territories. They are surpassing the eastern states in the amount of grass produced if not indeed in the quality of it. It has been demonstrated that it is not necessary to keep land in cultivation many years or even to break the soil in order to introduce the most valuable pasture-grasses. The virgin soil of many pastures that produce luxuriant crops of orchard and blue grass and white clover was never touched by the plow. The land whose fertility was never exhausted by producing several successive crops of corn and grain, as has been the case with that in the yields of beautiful crops of grain and clover, has never been built and land drained, the coarse natural grasses have disappeared, and those most suited for pasture have taken their places. In many sections springs and streams have been improved and a vast number of wells have been dug and supplied with wind pumps. All the knowledge that has been acquired in the east in relation to dairying has been brought here, and many improved methods have been originated by western dairymen. Western dairy products no longer signify inferior dairy products. The butter and cheese made in Wisconsin, Illinois and Iowa bring as high prices in home or foreign markets as those made in any of the eastern states. They are produced much cheaper on account of the comparatively low price of land. They are also marketed to better advantage. Western dairymen have the choice of both eastern and western markets. During years several past there has been such a competition for carrying dairy products from the west to the east that butter and cheese have been taken from Iowa to Boston cheaper than they have from Vermont.

The west now surpasses the east in the excellence of its butter and cheese factories. The largest combined factory in the world, it is said, is located at Fremont, Neb. The building is 50 by 100 feet on the ground, two and a half stories high, built entirely of brick and stone, has ventilated walls, and coat with the fixtures $25,000. Milk and cream are brought to it at a distance of nearly fifty miles by cars. It has a capacity for working up forty thousand pounds of milk per day. The manufacture of butter and cheese, as well as the production of meat and grain, is fast moving west.

No Such Word as Fall. "I have used your Spring Blossom for dyspepsia, headache, and constipation, and it has done me a great deal of good. I shall recommend it to my friends." "HENRY BERTOLLETTI, 56 Main St., Buffalo." "May 24th. Price 30 cents, trial bottles 10 cents." 144-14

A MINING ADVENTURE. Thrilling Experience of Two Pennsylvania Coal Miners. Scranton (Pa.) Republican.

The most thrilling occurrence that has happened in this vicinity for a long time took place at the Oxford shaft, Hyde park, Tuesday morning, two men having had a most marvelous escape from death. Mr. Thomas Richards, a member of the Continental club, that flourished in this city some time ago, is what is called the donkey runner at that mine. Every two or three days it is his custom to enter the shaft to see what water there is in the mine, as well as to keep the engine in good working order. At 8 o'clock on the above morning he intended to make the trip, and asked Mr. James Lewis, another workman, to accompany him. The Oxford mine, it should be remembered, is now idle, and no men are inside the works. Mr. Lewis consented, and they took their positions. The car was lowered to the Rock vein, at which working another carriage is taken to descend to the Clark vein, where the engine to be visited was. The change was safely made, the signal given, and they were lowered. When within 35 feet of the bottom of the shaft water, appeared upon the carriage, noticing which, Lewis said that their feet would get wet, but not thinking there was any danger, Richards, however, was better acquainted with the mine, and knew that the shaft was flooded, which was only too true, the water having overflowed a dam at the Rock vein above and filled the mine to the depth of thirty five feet. When Richards saw the water, with a spring from the side of the shaft and clung to a water-pipe that passed down the shaft. He called to Lewis to do the same, but the latter, realizing the danger now, was too excited and failed to follow.

The engineer at the top of the shaft was not aware of the matter, and kept letting the car down. When it began to enter the water it was a little tight, as it always is in passing that point, and the man at the engine gave additional steam, which plunged the car containing Lewis into the water. His foot became fastened in some way and he began to lose himself, which he finally did by pulling his foot from the water, he had gone under the boat some twenty-eight feet. As soon as freed his body floated to the surface, where he grasped the rope which attaches to the roof of the carriage and floundered about. The engineer stood at his post entirely unaware of the exciting time below. Nothing appeared wrong, and he was for a signal. In the meantime Richards, who had jumped from the car, was undergoing a severe struggle. As he clung to the pipe the top of the carriage in going by rubbed him so closely that it stripped his overalls and pants from his legs and he soon succumbed to way he lost his boots. One hundred and fifty feet separated him from the rock vein, the only place now left to signal the engineer, and to save Lewis this accident must be made as quickly as possible. Hand over hand he clambered up the pipe, resting now and then on the large beams that secured the sides of the shaft. Every few minutes he would call upon Lewis to hang to the rope, that he would soon be to the top and all would be right. Lewis was swallowing the foul air all the time. His strength was fast waning, and unless assistance came before long he would perish. Bravely Richards plodded on, through the strain upon him was waning. As last he gained the Rock vein, but the time consumed was three-quarters of an hour, and all that time Lewis was clinging for life to the rope. Richards quickly gave the signal and the engineer hoisted the carriage from the water. As the carriage gained the top of the water Lewis slid down the rope to which he had hold and sat upon the roof of the car. In this position he was raised to the Rock vein. Several workmen had come there after the signal, and they helped Lewis from his perilous position. Lewis with the greatest difficulty, as his hands seemed glued fast to the rope. They then changed carriages, as in going down, and were hoisted to the top.

A NOVEL RIDE. A Dangerous Trip on a Raft Down a Forty Mile Flume. Chicago Record, August 3. Ed. Falconer, formerly railroad station agent at Durham, now working in the mills at Smoky Flat, came to Chicago yesterday in the flume. He started from the mountain about 7 o'clock in the morning, when the atmosphere was cold and crisp, with nearly everything covered with frost, making one wish for an overcoat. He mounted a raft and shoved off, and did not stop until he had reached a warm and sunny station along the watery ride. Traveling in the flume is dangerous but exciting sport. One is sometimes gliding smoothly along on a level water, and then is suddenly dashed forward on a down-grade at an almost lightning speed, with the boat or raft riding at a seeming angle of 45 degrees. Along the flume, through the canyons and over gorges can be seen some of the most picturesque scenery of the Sierras which would make the heart of a true artist leap with joy. Very few accidents have ever occurred on the Sierras Lumber company's flume, but if there should be a break at some of the high places, a person riding along would suddenly be dashed into "king dom come." Riding down the flume has a striking similarity to sliding down a hill on a sled—it is fun to shoot downward with a tremendous velocity, but difficult to ascend. The boat that was once made by one of our citizens, whereby a person could ride up the flume, has doubtless proved a failure, as we never hear any more of it. It was the hope of the inventor to have his craft ascend the flume by the aid of the water passing against paddles like those of a river boat. Large quantities of lumber are now being floated from the mountains daily, and a person riding in the flume encounters great danger of being run into by floating timbers. Men are employed to watch and work along the flume the same as workmen on a railroad. Their duty is to keep the passage-way clear and break up lumber collisions. They have sections to work, and can always be seen moving along the sidewalk on the flume. Very few persons are allowed to ride in the flume, and it is only by hard efforts that the mill hands can get permission to make the trip to Chico. Boxes of trout are sent down from the Sierras to their friends in the valley, and a few years ago this wonderful forty-mile length of flume was used as a sort of message-carrier in bringing down orders for supplies and calls for physicians, the messages being written on a board or nailed up in a small box. But now, since we are connected with the mountains by telephone, the custom of message-sending by water has "gone up the flume."
