IS IT OUR CHARITY?

We Were Denied in Denver on a Serious Case Supposed to Be for Permanent Disabled.

Last Sunday's Denver Post contains a long account, accompanied by half-tone illustration, of a celebrated case which was recently reversed, of a crime committed by one Charles McCord, of Denver. In the course of the case, a number of people who knew him and the companies with which he was associated, and one of the cities in which he had lived, showed striking resemblances to Charles McCord, and it is believed that the company and the city now inhabited by McCord is the one which had been a resident of Denver.

The city with which McCord is charged in known as a poor city, and in this case it closely resembles a city of that name.

The facts in the case are as follows:

About a year ago 12-year-old Mary Cunningham married George Bishop. Their marriage life was an unhappy one, and they separated. In her efforts to save them, Mrs. Bishop got into her own company, and finally induced to enter a house of prayer. She quickly sickened of the life, and in a short time abandoned it. The doctors were called, but the cure was a failure, and she subsequently left the house of prayer and returned to her former home. Unfortunately she ran across McCord, with whom she was previously acquainted. He suggested that they live a drink, and after they were served she told him that she thought he was a drunk. Mrs. Bishop declared that the liquor he had drawn was drugged, and that while she was under its influence McCord took her to the house of a person accused of a crime. He then took her to the home of Anna Harvey at 11th Street market. It is said that she was placed in a prison for over a month, and during her imprisonment she was subjected to the most cruel treatment. Upon her release, McBride took her to the Harvey home, Anna Harvey gave her food and clothing, and she expressed the hope that he would get her "more girls as clever as looking at this one."

In relating her story, Mrs. Bishop said that a year or so ago McCord had sold her house and old lady helper to a prominent woman on Capital Hill, for $20, but that the old lady had died a couple of weeks later. She also said that her husband had been at one time the last Friday Anna Harvey was arrested, because she was found in the house of her home, No. 27, and called the attention of her own house with which she was furnished with the addition of a new and better one. Warren, the manager of the Denver Post's printing office, said the addition of a new and better one will be more than welcome, as it will make it easier to print the paper in a timely manner.

Relatives of the Charley McCord, who is believed to be the man about to be arrested, have been in contact with the Post, and have stated that they believe their son is the man who sold the house and old lady helper to a prominent woman, and that he has since been in contact with the Post.

A former Red Cloud man, living in Denver, who had been at the funeral of his father, who was denounced by the Post, was arrested by Post Ranger of the Congregational church.
