The great mercantile establishment of Omaha, Hayden Bros., is preparing its fall lists for free catalogues. The big demand for these exhausts editions of over one hundred and fifty thousand. This means an enormous expense to the big establishment, but as the great field they cover enables them to buy in immense quantities, they make prices that secure them orders on nearly every book sent out. Send in a postal card request for their clothing circular with samples, and as soon as issued it will be sent to you free. Hayden Bros. will be glad to quote you prices on any goods you need. Did you ever see a Snow Storm in Summer?

We never did; but we have seen the clothing at this time of the year so covered with dandruff that it looked as if it had been out in a regular snow-storm.

No need of this snowstorm. As the summer sun would melt the falling snow so will melt these flakes of dandruff in the scalp. It goes further than this; it prevents their formation. It has still other properties; it will restore color to gray hair in just ten times out of every ten cases.

And it does even more; it feeds and nourishes the roots of the hair. Thin hair becomes thick hair; and short hair becomes long hair.

We have a book on the Hair and Scalp. It is yours, for the asking.

If you do not obtain all the benefits you expect from the use of the Vigor, write the doctor about it. Probably there is some difficulty with your general system, which may be easily removed. Address: DR. J. C. AYER, Lowell, Mass.

Perhaps the most popular stone just now is the turquoise, $35 not being considered an out of the way price to pay for quite a small stone, provided the color be good. Grease or water spoils these stones entirely, and this is the reason that people with moist skins can seldom manage to keep the stone a good color for any length of time.

A time-honored joke, gray haired in the west, has struck Wall street. It is the conundrum, "What is the difference between a pessimist and an optimist?" the answer being: "An optimist is one who believes in a mascot, and a pessimist is one who believes in a hoodoo." The venerable chestnut excites the risibles of the busy Wall street gamblers inordinately.

"Your hair is getting thin, sir," said the local barber to a customer yesterday afternoon. "Yes," replied the gentleman addressed, "I've been treating it with anti-fat. I never liked stout hair." "But you really should put something on it," persisted the tonsorial artist, in a most earnest manner. "I do every morning," returned the customer. "May I ask what?" inquired the barber. "My hat," said the patron. Thereafter was silence.—Freeport Journal.

IN SEARCH OF VALDANE

By ROBIN GREY

CHAPTER VIII.—(Continued.)
"How odd!" she said absently. "I nearly remembered that name again. My memory must be coming back, I think."
"Let me trust it is," said Valdane rather nervously.
She leaned her chin upon her hand and looked thoughtful for a few moments then, raising her eyes—
"Mr. Martineau," she said, with a little sigh, "I should like all this business set on one side for a few weeks, please. Mr. Stelling is gone for his holiday—to Lord Umfraville's for the shooting."
"To Clarisdale?"
"Yes." She paused, and asked in some astonishment, "Do you know Lord Umfraville?"
"Well—a-yes; his wife was my cousin. I generally stay there every autumn."
"Indeed? Viscount Thornheath is a great friend of Mr. Stelling's."
"Ah, perhaps we shall meet! You wish then for me not to institute inquiries just yet?"
"Not just yet, please. I don't feel strong enough—not in quite good spirits enough to—" She checked herself bravely. Not for worlds would she have hinted, even to herself, that she thought Bernard might before all things have taken steps to ascertain whether or no she were free. But he had chosen instead to go to Clarisdale, and she was too loyal to murmur even to her own heart.

To Valdane it seemed like a respite. "Will you let me have a line when you wish me to pursue this matter, then?" he asked, rising to take his leave.
"Yes; or Mr. Stelling will come to see you. May I keep this copy of the will?"
She was Lord Umfraville's only unmarried daughter and, being the youngest, had been spoiled and petted during infancy, neglected whilst her sisters went to their balls and receptions, and then suddenly found herself, on her mother's death, mistress of the house. It was a bad training, but the result was on the whole better than might have been expected. Lady Mildred was very charming and not at all arrogant, though she was rather selfish.

The Umfraville family was in a bad way, having the misfortune to possess property in Ireland. For the last few years the tendency of affairs had been down, down—hopelessly down. Lady Mildred knew that it was she who was expected to retrieve the family fortunes, and it was this fact which just now weighed upon her mind, for she had been so foolish as to fall in love with her mother's cousin, Valdane Martineau.

Valdane was what Lord Umfraville would have superciliously called an "impossible" person. So secure had he been of the "impossibility" of this young man that he invited him each year to Clarisdale, feeling confident that no daughter of his would think of a young man who was a solicitor, and only moderately well off. He ignored the fact that the man had the manners of an aristocrat, the bearing of a perfect gentleman, the experience of a man of the world and the reputation of being irresistible. To Lady Mildred, alas, he was irresistible! She had succumbed to his influence before she knew it. Now it seemed as if she could not break free.

Accustomed as she was to admiration, she never doubted that he more than reciprocated this partiality. It had, therefore, been a decided surprise when Bernard arrived that evening. Lady Mildred received him alone. It was chilly and she had a fire kindled in the drawing-room. She sat on a very low chair, a red glow over her crimson draperies and golden hair.

She greeted the young man with a pretty mixture of cordiality and shyness. She made him sit opposite to her in a chair which was the ideal of comfort, and apologized prettily for the fact that none of the men were in yet, and all the girls were dressing. She gave him a cup of tea from a tiny table near, and insisted that he was hungry after his long journey, and must eat some tea-cake, which she lifted from the marble fender with a dainty pink handkerchief between her delicate hands and the hot porcelain. There was no light save from a branded cluster of wax candles on the tea table and the warm glow of the fire. The corners of the tastefully furnished room were in darkness.

Bernard began to realize what life might be, now that whatever he longed for was within his reach. In his house—the great house he meant to buy—he thought his drawing-room should be just like this. The man looked at Lady Mildred—at her perfect toilette, her delicate skin, the turn of her head, and thought how excellent she fitted in her surroundings.

She was beginning her work well. Only her motive was not to win Bernard, but to inflict pain on the recalcitrant Valdane, when he should arrive.

CHAPTER X.
On this warm afternoon, as she lay in the hammock, she was thinking it all over and wondering where Valdane was, and what or who was keeping him from her. She was thinking, too, of the open admiration in Bernard's fine eyes the night before as he leaned over her piano.

No doubt he was handsome. She thought she could win him; would it not be madness—utter madness—to let him go for the sake of a man who had never in so many words told her that he loved her, and whom, if she married at all, she would have to marry without her father's consent?

A footstep brushed on the grass. Lady Mildred half rose. Bernard was there, looking admiringly down at her. "Mr. Stelling! I thought you were shooting."
"I was, but when I found the picnic party had arrived without you, I gave them the slip, and meanly sneaked home through the woods, hoping to have the luck to discover your retreat. Fortune favors the brave, they say. I would not have missed a sight of you here for worlds!"

"Mr. Stelling! It was very foolish of you to lose all the sport."
"So long as you don't add that it's very impertinent of me to intrude I'm content! Your pose is really perfect. I used to be able to sketch a little. Would you lie still for ten minutes while I try my hand?"
"Oh, nonsense!"

"No nonsense at all. Oh, you won't be so unmerciful as to move. Do let me have five minutes!" He had taken out a small book and leaning against the smooth trunk of a beech, was sketching rapidly.

"There! That fan fits in well—we will call the picture 'A Summer Day.' Keep your hand and arm still for a minute, please! Do I weary you?"
"No"—she was half laughing—"I am so comfortable. You can't have done anything in so short a time."
"Just enough for a remembrance," he said. "You keep so still. My sister and her friend, Miss Lilbourne, always fidget so dreadfully; I shall tell them to follow your good example."
(TO BE CONTINUED.)

"MR. STELLING, IT WAS VERY FOOLISH OF YOU TO LOSE ALL THE SPORT."

"Certainly, but please don't lose it." He lingered simply because he could not tear himself away, though he could see in every drooping movement that she was exhausted and unhappy, and wished to be alone.

He would have bartered all his prospects for the privilege of taking her in his arms and soothing her—of holding her to his heart, and telling her that henceforth nothing should ever grieve her. He held out his hand at last reluctantly.

"Is there nothing more that I can do for you?" he asked.

"No, there is nothing," she replied, shaking her head and smiling. "You are so kind, I don't know how to thank you sufficiently for your kindness."

It seemed a painful wrench when he loosed the little fingers from his own.

"By-the-by, Mr. Martineau," she followed him to the door—"I left my wedding ring on your table. I nearly forgot to mention it to you. Did you see it?"

"I did," he stammered. "It is quite safe—you shall have it; I have it safe," he reiterated in confusion; "but I can't give it to you now."
How could he, when it was hung from his neck by a slender cord?

when her father received a letter from Valdane, saying that he could not get away for the first, and begging to be allowed to leave the date of his arrival at Clarisdale uncertain for a few days. The letter was cordially itself, but it left Mildred sore and wounded. She was astonished to find how keen was her disappointment, and how flat and dull the first had seemed without his accustomed presence. That evening her father took her aside.

"Mildred," he said, "do you remember that young Stelling who was at Oriol with Laurie—that very handsome young fellow who was so attentive to us when we went up to Commemoration? Would you believe it—through the death of an old woman—his godmother—no relation at all, they say—he has just come into a fortune of what do you think? Twenty thousand a year! All the papers are full of it. Now Mildred, my darling, every girl of your acquaintance will be after that young man. But if you gave your mind to it I am sure you could—eh? Think, my pet, what it would be for us all! Twenty thousand a year! And what's your beauty for, Millie, if not to draw you a prize—eh?"

Had such a course of action been proposed two days earlier it would have met with his daughter's unqualified disapproval, but at that moment her one desire was to punish Valdane, so she only smiled her slow, sweet smile and asked:

"Is he coming here?"
"This evening, my darling."
"I remember," said Mildred, "that he was very handsome."

"He was—and most distinguished-looking. What will you wear tonight, Millie?" asked Lord Umfraville casually, inwardly rejoicing at his success.
"Leave that to me," Mildred answered calmly. "I will wear—you will see what," and her father left her with a blissful feeling that all was going just as he wished.

Up-to-date doctors have for some time sounded a warning against the all too common invalid diet of "toast and tea." Few things, they say, are harder for the weakened stomach to digest than hot buttered toast. Now the physicians' warnings have received reinforcement from the French chef at Sherry's, who says: "I am no doctor, but if I were I would not let my patients eat hot buttered toast. I fully believe it causes as much indigestion as hot griddle cakes." In this country the average woman eats hot toast with quantities of butter on it every day.

Selling Patents.
Last week there were issued 425 patents to citizens of the United States. Of this number 140 had sold either the entire or part of their interests in their inventions before the patents were issued. This would show that more than a quarter of the inventors have been successful, and is probably an indication why so many applications are filed in the Patent Office. It is certainly safe to assume that at least 10 per cent of inventors, who were unable to sell before they had their patents issued, will be able to dispose of their inventions now that they have been secured by a title. Amongst the largest concerns buying patents were the following:

Langston Monotype Machine Co., Washington, D. C.
Welsbach Light Co., Gloucester City, N. Y.
Boitz Typesetting Machine Co., Herman, Mo.
Bradley Stencil Machine Co., Ansonia, Conn.

The August Century will be a mid-summer and travel number. In the former character, its special feature may be said to be a group of papers on tornadoes and thunder storms. The first of these is a graphic description, at first hand, of the tornado that visited Kirkville, Missouri, last spring. This was seen from his doorstep by John R. Musick, an author living in that city; and as it considerably changed its course, which at first was straight toward his house, he had an extraordinarily good opportunity to observe its actions and devastating effects. Some of its pranks seem hardly credible, but are vouched for by trustworthy witnesses, some of whom, together with a horse, were swept up and carried hundreds of yards through the air, without suffering the slightest injury. A learned paper on tornadoes in general is contributed by Prof. Cleveland Abbe of the weather bureau; and a kindred theme is helpfully discussed by Prof. John Trowbridge of Harvard, in "Powerful Electrical Discharges," and by Alexander Jay Wurts, of the Westinghouse company, in "The Protection of Electrical Apparatus Against Lightning."

[LETTER TO MRS. PINKHAM NO. 75,465]

"I was a sufferer from female weakness. Every month regularly as the menses came, I suffered dreadful pains in uterus, ovaries were affected and had leucorrhoea. I had my children very fast and it left me very weak. A year ago I was taken with flooding and almost died. The doctor even gave me up and wonders how I ever lived."
"I wrote for Mrs. Pinkham's advice at Lynn, Mass., and took her medicine and began to get well. I took several bottles of the Compound and used the Sanative Wash, and can truly say that I am cured. You would hardly know me, I am feeling and looking so well. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made me what I am."—MRS. J. F. STRETCH, 461 MECHANIC ST., CAMDEN, N. J.
