

Farewell dinner given by the Omaha Hotel Men's association to Rome Miller at the Hotel Fontenelle upon his retirement from the organization. Photo by Louis R. Bostwick.

Room constructed in Hotel Fontenelle to represent the hotel office of "them were the good old days." Postmaster Charles Black is registering. Photo by Bostwick.

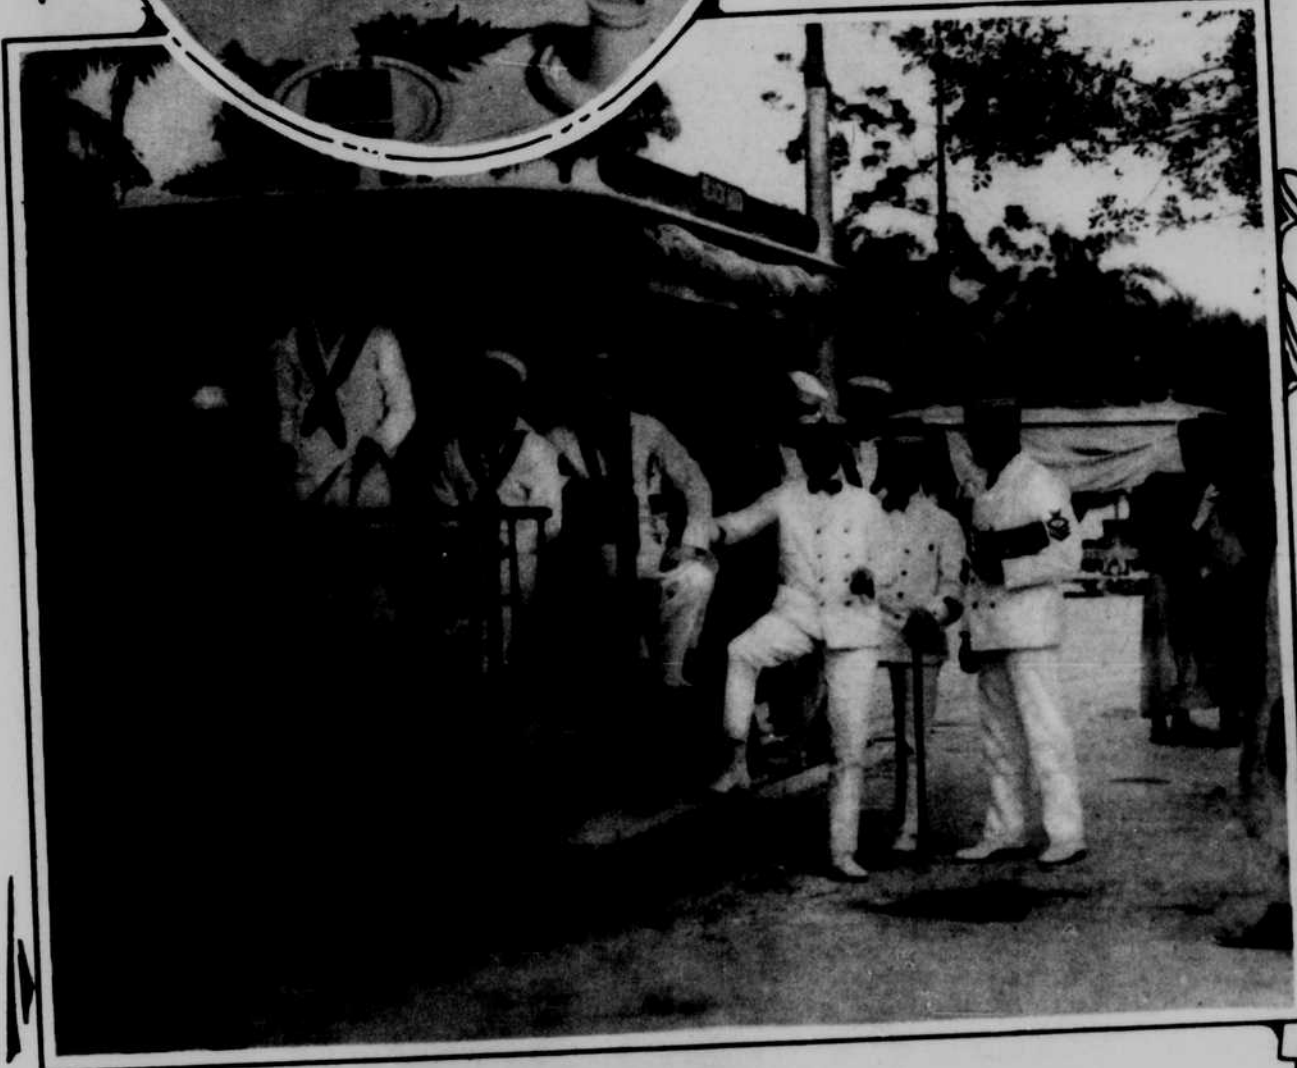

Rome Miller and Gene Eppley at the banquet in honor of Mr. Miller. Photo by Bostwick.

Dinner time on the farm of A. C. Flamming near Orleans, Neb. Some of 'em are hidden from view, but altogether there's 13 in this active litter, which is said to be not an unusual number in Harlan county spotted Poland China herds. Photo by A. T. Dunlap.

They enjoy life out in Wausa in Knox county, Nebraska. In the winter time vacant lots on West Broadway are flooded, electric lights for night skating are installed and everybody, young and old, joins in the fun.

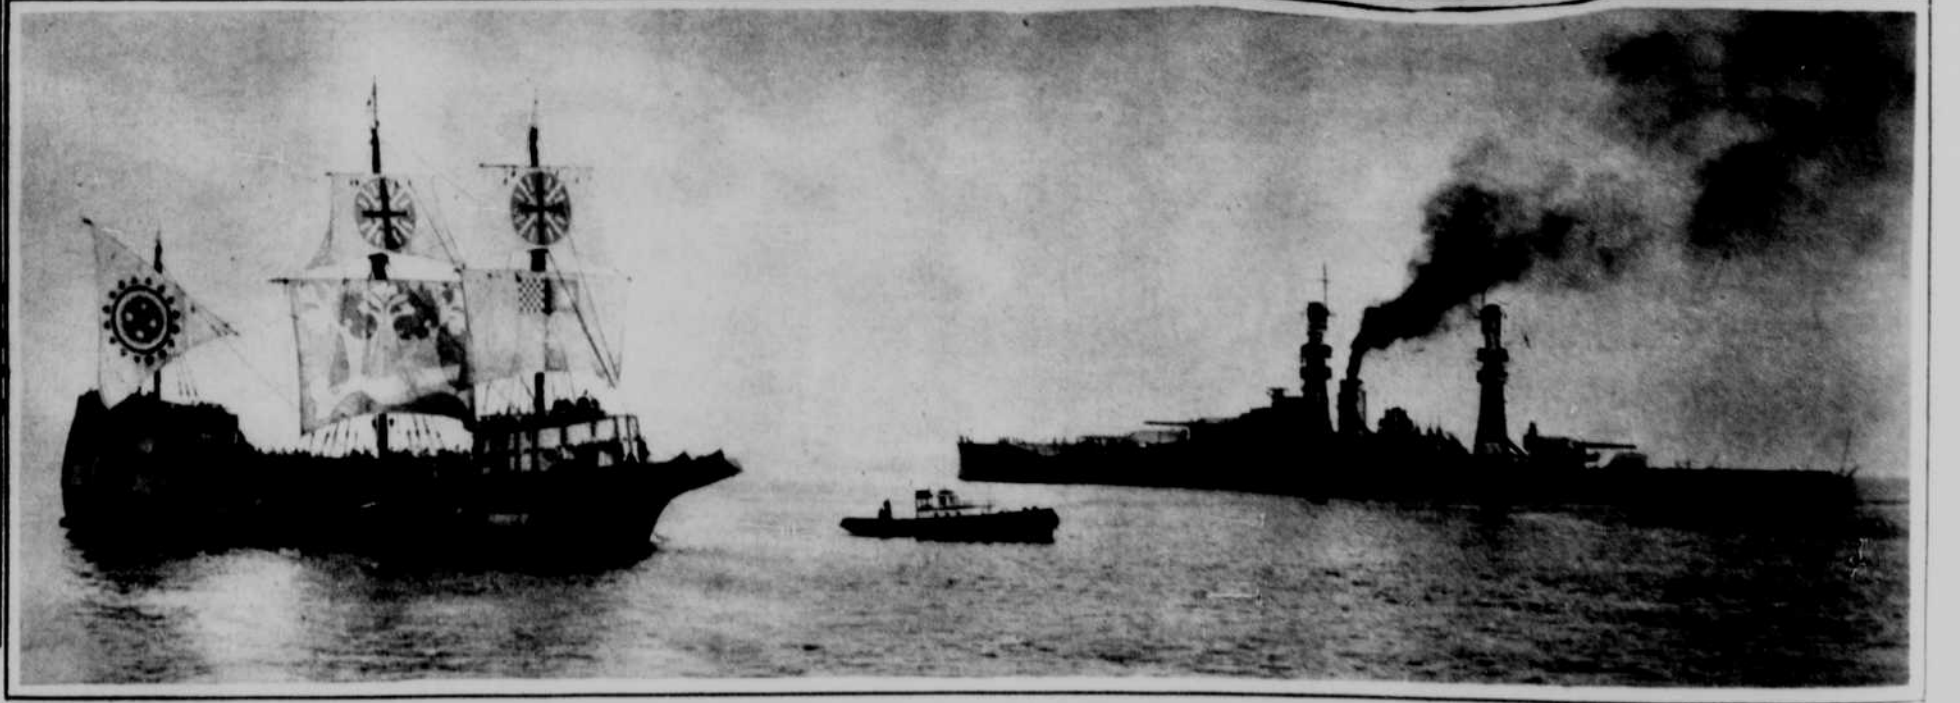

American bluejackets take a hand in running the horse trams in Bridgetown, Barbados.

In the 28 great glaciers in Rainier National park are many beautiful ice caves—erie places to visit and popular among tourists. Photo by Northern Pacific.

From fin-back whales, like this one, whale oil and whalebone are obtained. There are recorded less than 50 United States vessels engaged in whaling today, although it was once a leading American industry. This picture was taken in Bay City, Washington, where whales measuring from 50 to 70 feet and weighing 27 tons are no great novelty. Photo by Northern Pacific.

How time has changed war vessels. Here is the U. S. S. Oklahoma, a super dreadnaught, alongside of a reproduction of a 16th century ship. The Spanish galleon was built for use in a First National moving picture.