

NEW BOOKS AND MAGAZINES

Commonplace Boarding House with Bright People Furnish One Story. POLITICAL NOVEL ON GORDON GRAHAM PLAN Usual Grist of Stories Good, Bad and Indifferent and Some Works of Travel Come to the Reviewer's Table.

"The Standard of Pronunciation in English," by Thomas R. Lounsbury, professor of English in Yale University (Harper & Brothers). This volume is of particular interest to those who study the language of their land. The author discusses in an interesting manner the pronunciation of many common words and incidentally makes a plea for more rational spelling, which he admits will be hard to secure.

"The Citizen in His Relation to the Industrial Situation," by Henry Codrington Potter, D. D., LL.D., bishop of New York (Charles Scribner's Sons). This is a discussion of social questions in a lecture under the provisions of the William E. Dodge Fund of Yale University. The reverend writer discusses in 248 small pages "The Industrial Situation," "The Working Man," "The Capitalist," "The Consumer," "The Corporation" and "The States," all in their relation to the citizen.

"DeMars Affinity," by J. M. Bloomer (J. S. Ogilvie Publishing Company) is a book with a mission. It reminds one considerably in the construction of its plot, of some of Marie Corelli's work, although it is not exactly in that class. The author thinks he sees a plan for revolutionizing the social system, but rejects both the ideas of the socialists and those who believe in the present order.

"The Jew's Christian," by Trafford Sharforn (J. S. Ogilvie Publishing Company) is another book which offers a solution to some grave social questions and tells an interesting story in a matter-of-fact way. It deals with sin and shame and the way in which they may be made lighter if not abolished, although the author finds nothing better than suicide for two characters most deeply involved in the plot.

"Araby," by Edna St. Vincent Millay (The Smart Set Publishing Company) is one of the typical Smart Set stories; well told and full of a certain kind of ginger which today seems a necessary concomitant to books intended for "smart" reading. It deals with a cruise in the Mediterranean ocean in which two men of the world, a married woman, a young woman, a dog and a monkey are the actors. All the actors are introduced in the first chapter and they keep together until the heroine jumps into the ocean and the hero—but there isn't any hero.

"In Famine Land," observations and experiences in India during the great drought of 1899-1900, by Rev. J. E. Scott, chairman of the Methodist Episcopal relief committee. This book is written by one who has spent a great part of his life in India and who took a very active part in relieving the distress in the great famine. The reader is given an understanding of famines; the conditions under which they arise; the causes that produce them and the efforts put forth by the government and by individuals to relieve the distressed. The work is fully illustrated in a way that adds much to the text. Published by Harpers.

"Success Among Nations," by Emil Reich, LL.D. This work is an exhaustive study of the three questions which the average man's chief interest in history centers—which were the successful nations? What were the causes of their success? What nations are likely to be the successful nations of the future? Published by Harpers.

"In Defense of His Excellency," by Stanley Warren (Broadway Publishing Company) is a love story of the kind that is light and airy on one side. Then it carries a message from the author to the public—a plea for more respect for "the authority over us"—especially those who are chosen to fill offices at Washington and which gives the book its title—particularly the president of the United States. Incidentally it believes in recognizing classes of people which the author recognizes as already existing and the creation of a sort of order of aristocracy as a reward for merit. At the same time the education of the several classes should be restricted so as to keep each in that condition in which he may be born.

"Peace and the Vices," a novel of American naval life, by Anna S. Rogers. The serious element in the story, which is designed to show how a sailor's wife may be his guiding star in the greatest trial of his life. It is pleasantly relieved by a love story, full of humor and feeling. Japan is the scene of the story. Published by Scribner's.

"The Romance of Piscator," by Henry Wysham Lanier. A tale of how Piscator became a member of the craft; how the trout and landlocked salmon temporarily lost their magic for him before the mightier spells cast by the Peri; how he was tempted by circumstance, and offended; of wanderings, adventures, more fishing, and an embarrassing climax. Published by Henry Holt company.

"The Self-Cure of Consumption," published by E. B. Treat & Co., New York, is a treatise on the growing disposition to give up the use of drugs in combating the white plague and adopt the open air treatment, with proper diet and exercise. The widespread adoption of this treatment and its success as against the medicinal treatment makes this book of interest not only to consumptives, but to physicians. Valuable tables on nutritive values of foods and comparative benefits of different climates complete the book.

"Reading a Poem" is a reprint of one of

Muslin Underwear

Liberal in cut, right in make, all neatly trimmed with lace or embroidery, and hemstitched. The embroidery finished with best button hole stitched edge, therefore, no fraying or breaking of edge. The laces will all wash. Workmanship and material, the best. Their delicacy and strength appeal to all women of exquisite taste. Prices low compared with inferior qualities that flood the market. Special—About two dozen corset covers, size 32 only, were 80c, now 15c. If you want one—speak quick.

Henry fully Illustrated in My New Book. He Sells Stationary. 1607 Farnam Street. Fifty Cents.

Thackeray's little gems, one that has fallen into undeserved oblivion too long. We meet the delicious "Yellowplush" again, and of course the aristocracy which Thackeray satirizes so unmercifully. As an example of some of that kindly old cynic's early work, it is sure to find a warm welcome. A. Wessels & Co., New York.

"Tattlings of a Retired Politician" by Forrest Crissey, from the press of Thompson & Thomas, Chicago, is a book that makes you wonder where the author picked up his insight into the workings of political machines. In a series of letters from "Old Bill Bradley" to a young friend who is trying to get into politics, he takes the lid off the political pot, and shows you the whole boiling mass. The stories are snappy and pointed, and full of epigram. The humor is natural and McCutcheon did the illustrations. Many politicians who have not retired have confessed that the pictures drawn are true ones.
