DURHAM, N. C.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 23, 1894.

THE GLOBE FOR 1894

Will be conducted with a large majority of pen and a small sprinkling of scissors. Will fight fair, and be honest with friends and foes.

Will continue to print the news, as news goes. Will be a paper for the home and the fireside, as well as for the office and the factory.

Will be independent, bearing the imprimatur of no party and wearing the shackles of no man.

GOOD EVENING!
Have You Read The Globe?

DULL TIMES

Are times for hustling. The judicious advertiser strikes home when the pocket book is low. When the trade don't come to him he goes to the trade.

THE GLOBE reaches the trade you want.

WATCH THE GLOBE.

The Globe gives its readers the best.

There have been books and books printed on the World's Fair. Some are handsome, some are mere botches.

But of all, "The Magic City" is the best. It leads the procession, takes the rag off the bush.

It's the only really handsome thing of the kind that the average pocket-book can reach.

The Globe brings it in reach of the flattest purse.

QUARANTINE FOR CONSUMPTIVES.

Science has demonstrated that all contagious diseases are caused by the feeding of bacilli on the tissues of the body. Yellow fever, small-pox, cholera and all these so-called contagious diseases are understood to be prevented to a great extent by the complete isolation of the diseased persons. Instead of being the awful plagues that they once were they have come to play a comparatively small part in the death roll of civilized countries. This change has been accomplished almost exclusively by strict quarantine.

That dread disease, Consumption, sweeps away more persons every year than any other malady in the catalogue of ills. It is more uniformly fatal than cholera itself. In fact if it is understood that a person has consumption the relatives and friends of the poor unfortunate give up all hope. The doctors and nurses devote all their efforts not so much to expel the disease, as to prolong the life of the patient. All work on the idea that the ultimate outcome of the disease is death. Statistics show that 3,000 persons die from this disease in the United States every year.

This enormous loss of life could in a large degree be prevented by a rigid quarantine. It is universally conceded that consumption is the eating away of the tissues of the body by a voracious variety of bacilli. Then if the disease is caused by bacilli, those bacilli may be transmitted from one person to another, this constituting contagion. Contagious diseases, when of an especially violent nature are subject to quarantine. Consumption is probably the most fatal of all diseases.

Why is there not a rigid quarantine against consumption as there is against cholera or yellow fever?

Consumption is transmitted from one person to another in two ways: 1, by heredity; 2, by contagion. The first can be gotten rid of by prohibiting the marriage of consumptives. The second can be obviated by a strict quarantine of consumptives.

Both these will be opposed by sentiment. Sentiment would kiss the putrid lips of small pox and clasp the leper in the arms of love. But the matter must be viewed from the standpoint of common sense. The welfare of the whole is greater than the welfare of any part. The good of humanity demands a rigid quarantine against the consumptive.

A PEEP AT THE MENAGERIE.

In the menagerie at Washington there is enough to interest the most listless.

As the side-show man would say, "Here, gentlemen, we have the great and only, the senator from Kansas, whose beard sweeps the ground and in which the birds of the air build their nests."

"And, gentlemen, to the right you will observe the gentleman from New York who placed his billiard ball head in the road and stopped the Hornblower band."

"Here we see the two Carolina senators. These are like the see-saw; when one is up, the other's down; when one goes one way, the other goes the other."

"Over there you observe the gentlemen from Colorado. They wear silver dollars for ear-rings and watch charms, and insist that the streets of the New Jerusalem should be paved with silver instead of gold."

"Just to your right is Senator Allen, who has distanced six phonographs in a talking match and didn't half try."

"Most of the other senators are at Mr. Benning's, studying the relative movements of equine flesh."

"Now, gentlemen, we come to the larger tent of our Consolidated American Menagerie."

"Maine furnishes us with two interesting specimens. Tom Reed is the fat woman of this show, who is timed to jump up at least six times during each democratic speech. The gentleman just there is Boutelle, who jumps up when Reed don't."

"Over to the left you will see 'The Watch Dog of the Treasury,' who pinches a copper till the Indian gives his war-whoop, and just beside him is the Ohio man who is still trying to devise a method to dispose of the surplus."

"Mr. Simpson, the prophet Jeremiah, just in front of us, is the gentleman who has a negative cinch on Fame; this comes from the fact that he was never taught to wear socks."

"One of our most interesting exhibits, the gentleman from Georgia, has been called from us by the hand of providence."

"That gentleman who wears the tiger's robe don't talk much, but when he does he says something."

But at this point the ring master came along with the mace, and we got out of way.

In Natural Photograph Colors, embracing all the wonderful features of the World's Fair and its surroundings, and the famous Midway Plaisance, with its curious and interesting character sketches of life in foreign countries and among wild and curious races of people.

IT IS The Greatest, The Grandest, The Most Beautiful, The Most Complete

History of the Fair that has been published. The Photographs, in natural colors, are

BEAUTIFUL AS A DREAM,

While the historical descriptions give the work a value beyond all computation. The author spent nearly the whole summer at the Fair, preparing his notes and superintending the work of the corps of artist employed in taking views. These pictures are the finest in existence. They were taken by trained artists of more than national reputation, who knew how to secure the best results and the most favorable points of view. Their beauty and splendor will be a surprise to our readers. Nothing equal to them has ever been seen in pictorial representations; and the fact that they were obtained especially for The Magic City, and will not be made common by promiscuous publication in other works, adds a hundredfold to their value.
