

SEES BRYAN'S DEFEAT

Representative Fowler Calls Him
Republican Asset.

In giving his opinion of the Presidential election, Representative Fowler, who was active in the recent currency legislation, said recently that he believed Bryan was "one of the best assets of the Republican party" and that his defeat would be crushing.

"The nomination of Mr. Bryan is just what the Republicans desired," said Mr. Fowler. "It is just what a very large contingent of the more conservative Democrats also desired. These Democrats, like the Republicans, realize that William J. Bryan, with his vagaries, has been one of the best assets of the Republican party for the last twelve years; and they hope and believe that his defeat this year will be crushing and final. On the one hand we have intelligent, progressive policies, but essentially conservative, the prospect of sound money legislation and the preservation of the protective policy with the revision of the tariff; on the other hand, we have radicalism run mad, rank free trade, government issue of money or greenbackism, and yet not half of Bryan's erratic political possibilities ever hinted at."

"The history of the Republican party could not be better typified than in the person of William H. Taft. Historic Democracy is little more than suggested by Populist, Bryan. Taft is what he was in his college days—the biggest man among his fellows. No one who has ever come in contact with him at any point of his career has failed to realize that he was the man of all others destined for the Presidency or the Chief Justiceship. At no time in the succession of his many and grave responsibilities has he struck less than twelve. All men without regard to party affiliations have invariably said that no one could have done better. This has been indeed high praise; is only a forerunner of what will be said of one of the greatest administrations this public has ever had."

"Bryan, on the other hand, has advocated every political 'ism' that he thought would attract any votes, and the result is that the things he has stood for have been condemned by the people, and he has kept on striking zero, with still another zero awaiting him. Indeed, our history will be searched in vain for a political leader whose successive views have been so hopelessly discredited by events. Under these circumstances, you ask me what will the American people do next November."

"What do you think New Jersey will do?" Mr. Fowler was asked.

"New Jersey has expressed herself twice with regard to William J. Bryan," he replied, "once when she gave McKinley and Hobart 86,000 majority, and once when she gave McKinley and Roosevelt 51,000 majority, and she has never regretted either vote. She may well be proud to give to Taft and Sherman at least 75,000 majority."

"You of course, will run again for Congress, this fall?"

"My position now is precisely what it always has been. If the Republicans of the Fifth Congressional District see fit to again honor me by a nomination, I shall accept the responsibility with the keenest sense of appreciation, and with the earnest desire, if elected, to serve my district and my country well. It would be a source of peculiar satisfaction to me to make the fight by the side of William H. Taft, and subsequently to assist him in carrying out his policies. I have known him intimately for thirty years, and he is my ideal of American manhood."

Orange Street Improvement.

Orange has thirty-six miles of streets and of this number only about one and a half miles are unimproved. Four years ago, when the Common Council adopted the provisions of the ten-year instalment plan, the predictions made at that time that the people of limited means living along the unimproved streets, would take advantage of the plan of paying a part of the assessment each year, has been fully realized. As soon as the people realized what a great benefit would result and how easily the payments could be made they began to petition the Common Council for the improvements. The office of the street commissioner and surveyor are combined and that official looks after sewer connections.

When the justice found that he was shy the watch his ire was aroused and he caused Mrs. Murphy's arrest.

COURSES IN AGRICULTURAL

The New Jersey State Agricultural College Prepares Them for Farmers

The short courses in agriculture which were begun two years ago are again offered, and are open to all residents of New Jersey over sixteen years of age.

All courses will be for twelve weeks, and will begin December first, and with one week vacation for the Christmas holidays, will close on March fifth, 1909.

Tuition is free to residents of the State, but an entrance fee of $5 will be required, and $25 of non-residents. Board and rooms were secured in private families last year at from $4.50 to $6.50 per week. The expense for books need not exceed $6, as but few are required, although students should own the books treating of the principal subjects. The entire expenses of the course need not exceed $80.

The building erected has been found to be well adapted for the purpose; it contains large, well-lighted class rooms and laboratories, a well-equipped creamery and dairy room, a library, reading room and general lecture room. New buildings and further equipment will be added before the school opens.

All the courses will be of a practical nature. The student will be taught those principles and applications of science which will enable him to carry on his farm more efficiently and profitably. Instruction will be given by lectures, recitations and laboratory work; special attention will be given to the latter. Students will be given practice in testing soils, spraying, pruning, budding and grafting, stock judging, milk testing, butter making, and similarly in other lines, the classroom instruction will be followed by actual practice.

Three courses will be offered:—1, General Agriculture; 2, Dairy Farming; 3, Fruit Growing and Market Gardening.

No young man who intends to be a farmer can afford to miss taking one of these courses. The day has come when preparation for farming is needed, as for any other profession. These courses come at a time when work at home is least pressing, and allow the students to be back on the farm for most of the Spring work.

A complete announcement of courses will be ready later. For this and other information, address Edward B. Voorhees, Director, New Jersey Agricultural College, New Brunswick, N. J.

Burglars Busy in Town.

The office of Dr. C. L. Dr. Dobbins left his office about half past six and the janitor of the building returned at quarter after seven and remained during the evening in the hall, then closing the iron gate, so it seems as if the theft must have been made during the three quarters of an hour after the doctor's departure. The goods stolen are valued at about $150.

On Wednesday night another visit was paid to the Convent section by burglars, this time the residence of E. H. Tower being entered and rifled of the valuable silver as in the other burglaries.

The Shippen house on Madison avenue, occupied by E. W. Olney, was broken into during Sunday night and like the other robberies in that neighborhood the best silverware found was taken.
