OUT OF THEIR OWN MOUTHS.

"If we take we must also keep. A foreign territory is not incorporated until the day when the rights of property of Germans are rooted in its soil. With all necessary prudence, but also with inflexible determination, a process of exploration should be inaugurated by which the Poles and the Alsatians and Lotharingers would be gradually transported to the interior of the empire, while Germans would replace them on the frontiers."—Friedrich Lange, Reines Deutschtum. 1904, p. 207. WASTE IS CRIMINAL

"To waste now is nothing short of criminal," Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo.

The duty of the American people economize in consumption of food and all other materials as well as saving money can not be put often or too strongly urged upon them. The duty is so important, its observance so vital to our country's success, that it should be kept constantly before them.

The proposition is plain and understandable. We have lessened the productive powers of the country by taking 2 million men away from the productive forces of the country, millions of producers of one kind or another. The soldiers are consumers of the products of our farms, factories, mines and when the munitions they expend and will expend against the enemy is considered. Only the tremendous consumers of the munitions of the world can realize the imperative duty of economy in eating and their self-evidence and duty.

"THE WORLD DO MOVE."

It cannot but prove a very satisfactory thing to the people of Europe, that in the months of January, A. D. 1917, the world have produced enough of food, of war implements and of all other things necessary to the existence of humanity, to not only maintain existence, but to enable the belligerent nations to keep them from "going to the bad," and the various other changes which have come over the world during the past year, and to add to the wealth of the world. And yet the belief seems to prevail that the struggle must cease because the resources of the world are exhausted. Only the ignorant think these things without reading the world's history, and the foolish are those who think that the end is near.

There seems to be good grounds for believing that the packing industry of the nation will be taken over by the government, telephone and telegraph lines will be placed under government control, and there is no telling how far government management of railroads may spread before the end. This is laid away on the shelf with the predecessors.

A year ago of course, we were not at war and there was only a remote chance that we would be drawn into the European maelstrom. But when the kaiser's high-handed methods became intolerable and America was forced to unsheath the sword in defense of those principles for which our forefathers bled, fought and died, things began to happen—things which had we been at peace would not have come to pass within the next fifty years if at all.

War, terrible though the cost may be, has made many dreams come true. Not only is it going to bring us government ownership of all public utilities but we shall profit in other ways. In the science of medicine and surgery the advances made in the last three years than had been made in the twenty-five years preceding the war. Up until the time the European nations decided to settle their arguments on the battlefields the airplane was regarded as an experiment and plaything. Theorists predicted that it never would reach a state of perfection or be of any practical benefit to humanity. Airplanes were unsafe, they said. It was preposterous to believe that man could develop a heavier-than-air machine and go gliding along at an altitude of several thousand feet like a bird. And yet statistics show that from the standpoint of casualties the aviation service is safer than any other branch connected with the army. Airplanes have been perfected to such an extent that one seldom crashes to earth unless it is shot down, notwithstanding the fact that they are subjected to the most severe trials on the European fronts. The prediction is made that after the war airplanes will have regular routes of travel, carrying both mail and passengers here and in Europe. A scheme is now on foot to have airplanes cross the Atlantic carrying messages between General Pershing and Washington, and we may soon hear of these wonderful birds—the product of man's inventive genius—accomplishing in a couple of days tasks which at present require ten days or two weeks.

The war is going to teach us thrift. From one of the most extravagant nations in the world we are going to emerge from this conflict as a nation of savers—not misers—but with a determination to cut out some of the useless expenditures which we have made in the past.

We shall learn to live more frugally.

Since war was declared and our young men have been flocking to the colors we have found that we are a nation of weaklings. Young men who should be as sound as a dollar have been rejected at recruiting offices when they came under the trained eyes of army and navy physicians due to the fast life the people have been leading and the fact that they have paid too little attention to their health and they, seeing it for using, have been rejected by thousands. Perhaps our experience during this war will lead to some universal system being adopted whereby everybody will be subjected to physical examination from time to time and every physical defects to be corrected where they are found to exist, before the ailment a firm hold and a compensation is impossible.

A GOOD START.

The meeting held at the Chamber of Commerce last Saturday, which was attended by a goodly number of farmers as well as residents of Albuquerque was a good start in the right direction. It is hoped that the plan which are under way for creating a marketing bureau will be carried through to completion.

One lesson we have experienced in the past and only is formidly emphasized is that to the nation as well as the individual, has been that of ineffective marketing methods. For instance, take the Texas truck growers. When shipping time came, they would begin to ship to Kansas City, St. Louis, Chicago, or wherever each individual grower thought best. Frequently it happened that the bulk of them would decide to ship to the same city which would result in the market there being glutted and the producers were often compelled to accept the most pitiance the commission men offered them or have it rejected entirely. If there had been a central bureau to keep in touch with the markets and give the growers information direct the destination of shipments, they would have been directed where they were needed.

One of these days we shall have to have a system of marketing our products from what prevails at present. The country will be divided into districts or zones corresponding our present federal reserve districts. Farmers in farming and truck growers, and producers of every kind will be members of organizations or associations. When they have products to sell it will be handled through a central organization in each county. The head of this organization will communicate with the head of the district organization and find out in what parts of the country enough is ready to find a ready market.

Over these district organizations there will be an official known as the federal reserve director, who will be the head of the marketing system. By receiving daily reports of market conditions, he will be able to tell where there is a surplus of a certain commodity and where there is a deficiency. Then when he is appealed to by district heads he will be in a position to give immediate advice regarding shipments and the district head can in turn advise county associations. When such a scheme is put into effect farm products can be shipped where they are really needed and there can be distributed so there will be no overstocked markets and producers will receive fair returns for what they have to dispose of.

This is the plan proposed by the Chamber of Commerce working in conjunction with the Rio Grande valley farmers, only on a smaller scale, of course.

The first thing we should do is to encourage home consumption of home raised products. The charge has been made quite often in the past, and came up again at Saturday's meeting, that farmers living in the territory contiguous to Albuquerque have been unable to dispose of their products here, or if they did succeed in selling it the price paid them was far below the prevailing market price. We do not say that the allegation is true. But if it is we certainly should terminate such a state of affairs. Home production and home buying should be encouraged, and if any of our merchants are discriminating against home products that fact should be ascertained and an effort made to avoid such complaints in the future. The Herald is heartily in favor of buying at home and that includes what our farmers have to sell as well as the wares on the shelves of the city merchants.

The bureau of agriculture working with the farmers should have nothing to do with a central organization to handle all marketing. It will, we are certain, prove to be one of the most beneficial accomplishments ever consummated for the benefit of Albuquerque and the farmers of the surrounding country who do their trading here.

The audience will now be entertained by Little Willie, the child prodigy, who will render that pathetic wartime song entitled "Don't Worry About the Coal Mother, Father, Just Come Home With a Load."

"Hope's my German hunting license," said a young man yesterday when he returned his questionnaire to the local draft board.

A man seldom shoots above the mark at which he aims. So we're aiming high in 1918.

Great opportunities come to those who make use of small ones.

When the kaiser pulled the trigger on 1917 he did not know the kick of the gun was going to put Autocracy out of business.

Although the sun is slow at rising these mornings it is always on time.

President Wilson is like the lightning. He never likes to strike the same spot twice.

WHAT'S THE USE OF KICKIN'?

When the food supply goes shootin'
An' sugar's sold by thimblefuls an'
milk's sold by the cup
An' flour is out of fashion when it comes to match bread
An' corn pone ain't nice sprung to serve
as sweetmeats instead
An' there's an ration at south seems
there won't be any soon
As if the only cow on earth was
standin' the moon
Kind of pinched it, as you will—
spectin cow would do.
An' comes down the other day, as
folks again could have beef
steak—
An' when even better, what used to be the worry of stylish folk,
Has taken such a rise in life to fair
one keeps us broke,
An' everything is just the same only
some things is worse
An' soup is better, bread, one stave,
or else we'd have no purse—

When all these things is as they is Cities we're struggle for the right.
We met a lot to keep our heads as for
it on of common sense an' light
If we stand because we can't have everything we used to could,
We're not helpin' when we need to make the most help does most good.

Sure, there lots an' lots of people
What likes sugar to the neck
An' without three layers of bread a cake they say they'd be a wreck.
An' they eat more meat at one meal
than one should eat in a week.
But we're goin' to stop such eatin'
help out, over across the street.

An' shucks, who cares a fiddle 'bout
the price or lack of wheat
If our boys what's fightin' knows
just all they want to eat?
When this blooming war is over an'
our boys come marchin' back,
We'll forget there was high prices or
that once the food was slack.

THE KNITTED WEDDING.

"Good morning, Mrs. Kissel-Bits," said the reporter from the Morning Glory. "I came for the details of your daughter's wedding."

"Ah, yes," murmured Mrs. Kissel-Bits distractedly, as she bent anxiously above the nose warmer she was knitting for the soldiers. "Have a speck 'a war work you? You'll pardone me if I keep on working as I talk, but I've just learned this new stitch and I'm afraid to stop until I'm quite sure of it.

"Well, my daughter Gladys was married at 4 o'clock this morning to Mr. Percy Cumpsick, the groom. The bridesmaids were pearl gray and duck and pink and two Miss Gladdis, Tiffie, Miss Reverse and Irene Lou. Miss Webber, Clarence, Miss Pansetta Teeboe and Miss Alvera Gloss. They wore skirts and pink and white spiffled dotswiss over chevenne silk. The bride's six half-Nelson and a pirouette of embroidered scallops and carried real live and frolicsome a bouquet of hothouse steaks and cheese. The sink me and double ale ring ceremony was the Rev. Clyde Lamb."

Pardonnez the reporter said as he was on, and the next piece Morning Glory opened the following account of the wedding:

Miss Jane Puck and Mr. Clinton Tucker were united in six half Sir Leslie Embroidered Marriage ceremony at noon at the home of the bride's parents. The bridesmaids were Miss Sink Double and Miss Bougher Bridge. Miss Skin Tweezers and Miss Bessie Hup. The groom carried a cheapie cased lever and was attended by Mr. Ed Ward Jones as his pirouette and a double.

TOO MUCH FREEDOM

Freedom of the seas is a very academic question, for there are more than one kind of freedom. There is freedom of speech. There is freedom of the press. There is freedom of assemblage. There is very nearly complete freedom of intellectual thought. There is freedom of action. There is freedom of worship. There is freedom of the professor who abuses his position to preach his own political views. There is freedom, unfortunately, of the professor who abuses the privilege of academic freedom to preach the doctrine of his own country's enemies. There is freedom, unfortunately, of the professor who abuses the privilege of academic freedom to preach the doctrine of his own country's enemies. There is freedom, unfortunately, of the professor who abuses the privilege of academic freedom to preach the doctrine of his own country's enemies.

The abuse of so-called "academic freedom" is a graver menace than the ordinary abuse of free speech. The socialists or the international money power does not address itself to the "intellectual class," but the "intellectuals," as President Hutchins of the University of Chicago has shown, influence the country's youth, each one according to his interest to be a force in the community. The utterances of Prof. Scott Nearing, since being dropped from the faculty of the University of Pennsylvania, abundantly justify the summary action taken by the trustees of that institution. Columbia University, too, has had some difficulty with professors who have abused the privilege of academic freedom. Two professors are said to be dismissed, while two others have resigned out of sympathy with the dismissed colleagues.

In his message to congress, President Hutchins pointed out that a man volunteering in the defense of freedom of utterance when he connects himself with an institution of learning which has pursued for itself certain traditions and which is the agents of the people stands by certain fundamental principles. Speaking as an individual he would gain no hearing, but as a member of the faculty his utterances carry with them the weight of the institution that is behind him. "By assuming such a connection with an educational society," says President Hutchins, "a citizen of war with its purposes or disloyal to its traditions and its organization is neither wise nor just. This nation is not ready to turn over the education of our youth to a German Bolshevik Leninist."

Paris Theater at Santa Fe Leased By James Provas

Special Correspondence to The Herald.

Santa Fe, N. M., Jan. 5.—It was announced yesterday that the lease on the Paris theater has been sold to James Provas, manager of the Rialto theater in Albuquerque, and owner also of a moving picture theater in Belen, Ariz. Mr. Provas will take over the management of the Paris theater January 15. He purchased, with the lease, the organ, the piano, machines and all of the equipment of the theater except the seats. The building is owned by Nelson Salmon, who leased the following statement in regard to the change of management:

"The friends and patrons of the Paris theater should be pleased to learn that Mr. Provas has decided to extend his interests to Santa Fe and make the Paris theater one of three he will operate. The high class of pictures he has shown in Albuquerque and Belen is an indication that he will find the very best obtainable for Santa Fe. He is enthusiastic over the opportunity here and says the Paris theater is the swellest equipped moving picture theater he has seen west of Kansas City.

Mr. Salmon added that if the people have any suggestions to make about films or changes in the arrangement of seats or any other features connected with the moving picture business he will be glad to have the public talking with Mr. Provas. He is the right man," he added.

DEAD MEN'S EFFECTS ARE SOLD AT AUCTION ON THE SHIP'S DECK

By Associated Press

London, January 5.—Dead men's effects are sold at auction on the ship's deck by an old custom in the British navy. Prices out of all proportion to the value of goods are often realized for the men's kits, especially if the late owner was popular with his shipmates.

Purely personal belongings, such as letters and photographs, are first taken out to be forwarded to the deceased's relatives. Then, as soon as official sanction is obtained, the rest of the articles are taken to a convenient part of the ship and offered for sale. The master-at-arms acts as auctioneer.

Bidders who have obtained the small articles from such an auction sometimes throw back their purchases for resale until as many Jackies as feel inclined have had a chance to contribute something towards the assistance of the dead man's next of kin. Thus these kit sales become the Lower Deck's way of taking up a charitable collection.

The kit of a deserter is similarly sold by auction, the proceeds going to the national treasury. But the whole outlook is rarely for him more than a few shillings, as many sailors regard the possession of articles formerly belonging to a deserter as undesirable, if not unlucky.
