The Goose That Laid Golden Eggs Ought not to have been slain. Her fate was wholly unmerited. She was a most useful fowl. There are lots of bipeds of our race who don't know as much as she did.

Mrs. S. A. Kell, of Pomona, Cal., had the bad luck to sprain her ankle. "I tried several liniments," she says, "but was not cured until I used Chamberlain's Pain Balm.

THE SLANDERER.

The angels of the living God, Marked from old with mystic stains, O'er their vision, lest they see, One sinner prostrate in his shame.

A MORAVIAN BRIDE.

It was the 1st of August, that brightest, sunniest month of all the year, when the bleak northern coast of Labrador takes on a fleecy garb of emerald green.

In the vessel's waist the captain, a bachelor of 40 years, promenade deck and forth with a young woman, who lightly rested a gloved hand on his arm.

"You know no more of him than merely this: That he is yet in his novitiate, acting as keeper of the mission store; that he is 24 and wants a wife and is willing to accept the bishop's choice.

"It is too great a sacrifice," he said, with warmth. "The pity of it, and there is one would give!"

"You are a valued servant of our church. Your Christian duty is to help me."

"My duty as a man, and as a member within the companion way, and, vexed, he turned impatiently to the lounging helmsman, severely recalling him to his neglected post.

In the solitude of her cabin she flung herself upon the cushioned locker, the captain's words still ringing in her ears. He loved her! Of that she felt assured.

"No, no!" she broke in hurriedly. "You are a valued servant of our church. Your Christian duty is to help me."

"No, no!" she broke in hurriedly. "You are a valued servant of our church. Your Christian duty is to help me."

sledge to the lower missions, where he bought the factor of the great company buying furs, and who brought a few precious letters for The Post, forwarded by wicker carrier from Quebec.

Which would it be and could he gain her love? How should he greet her? He, a gawky youth, who, guarded in his school, accidentally trained, had no experience with the other sex, regarding them as quite beyond his ken.

He left the store with speed, fled to his room, bathed, combed and dressed him in his best, looked at the photograph and put it back within its velvet cover next his pillow, laughed and half cried and paced the polished floor, and through the open window nervously watched and waited for the coming ship.

The murmur of the voices now increased and swelled into shouts of "Glennakook-a-ko-o-o-ee!" and round the precipitous point, with white sails set and pennants flying, swept the noble brig.

The novice hid his face within his hands, with fluttering heart of mingled joy and fear, and wished himself 10,000 miles away.

"It is a thing most serious to you both, but you have been together seven days. Not long in the world, but long enough to learn to judge a lover's moods and whims."

"But I can speak myself for this young man. I pledge you he is upright, virtuous, kind."

"And as for you, my son, she is far more. Her features would be ample passport without this commendation from the church. That you already love her I can see. What do you answer?"

"I pray her to be my wife for both of us and give her till the morrow to reply. If it should wish for more delay, it is not necessary we should wed at once, and meanwhile I may try to win her love."

"What says the maiden?"

"The girl was touched by the generous thoughtfulness the youth had shown and by the kindness of the aged man. She cast one swift, wistful glance through the open window at the anchored brig, where the captain's stalwart figure paced the quarter, and blushed and bowed her head and tried to speak. Then, with returning courage and resolve, she approached and knelt beside the old man's chair.

"Father," she said, her sweet voice tremulous, "I have had thoughts, unworthy of my faith, rebellious thoughts and fears and wicked moods. If either is unworthy, let it be I."
