IF I HAD THE TIME.

If I had the time to find a place And sit me down full face to face With my better self, that stands so show In my daily life that rushes so,

If I had the time to let my heart Speak out and take in my life a part, To look about and to stretch a hand To a comrade quartered in no luck land;

If I had the time to learn from you How much for comfort my word could do, And I told you then of my sudden will— To kiss your feet when I did you ill—

BY CHANCE.

"Governor," said a voice behind me, "isn't that the house where Alice lived?"

"I never should have known the speaker had it not been for the epithet. It was Jack, careworn and gray and looking 35 instead of 27."

"Yes," said I, "I am quite sure of it, but you ought to know best. Wasn't she once a sweetheart of yours?"

"My poor fellow! I extend you my most heartfelt sympathies. But I didn't know you had ever married. However, we have kept such poor track of each other that I don't wonder at my ignorance."

"Well, 'governor,'" said he, with a faint shadow of his old smile, "I left America nine years ago. I went straight to Quebec and lived there three years. It was there I met her who became my wife. We were married just six years ago last month. Her health failed and we went south. She grew worse, gave birth to our first child and died. That was a little over two years ago, and as the child is in good hands (my sister-in-law's) I consented to come here."

"But, Jack, what made you go to America? Why didn't you stay here?" "Well, it was the same old tale of the young workman not being fit to marry his idol. As you said, Alice was my sweetheart. She said so herself, dear girl, but her brother Tom—there was the difficulty. I called on Alice very often and had asked her to be my wife, though I was but 19. She said 'Yes,' but Tom wouldn't hear of it. I tried to bring him around by all manner of means, but he was resolute. He had never liked me, and he never hesitated to tell me so. In fact, he took great pleasure in rating me before as well as behind my back."

"One night—I think it was Halloween—a crowd of young fellows got out on a lark, and in their sport took Tom's small donkey out of its shed, and pushing it upon the roof of a wagon horse, which sloped almost to the ground, tied it there. Tom thought I was the prime mover in the trick, though I knew nothing of it, and accordingly the next night, when I called, promptly showed me the door, with the injunction never to set foot inside it again."

"I saw Alice at times, but she seemed somewhat changed. So after I had tried all in my power to straighten things I got angry about it, and when I was offered a position in Canada I was glad to leave. My marriage was not spite work. I loved Alice and always shall, but I knew I could be happy with Helen and then she said she loved me."

not married. Some fellow off in America jilted her, so they said. "Well, Jack," said I, after we came out, "I'm not a matchmaker, but if, as you say, you always had a warm affection for Alice, why don't you begin again? It isn't too late."

Jack blushed to the roots of his hair and said he should never go there after having been shown the door. I tried to coax him, but it would not do, yet all the time I could see he wished to meet his old "flame" once more.

"Heavens, 'governor!'" he gasped, "Ring the bell for me!" "Tom Neal came to the door and greeted us warmly."

"Jack," said he, "I owe you an apology—I have owed you one for years. I found out who did that work with the donkey and I'm sorry I ever treated you as I did."

"Sailing! What! Are you going back?" "Yes," returned Jack demurely, "I start tomorrow."

Future of the Microscope. As the physician's assistant and guide in diagnosis, the microscope is coming rapidly to the front. It is now the custom with some advanced physicians whenever there is a case with obscure symptoms, or where consultations are thought necessary, to draw a few drops of the patient's blood and examine it under the microscope.

Far to a Star. Besides being a great astronomer, Sir Robert Ball is a man of figures. He tells us what it would cost to reach one of the most distant stars, supposing a railway were constructed to it from London and that the low rate of 1 penny per 100 miles prevailed.

Pious Indians. The history of Canada, especially its earlier history, preserves the story of many a deed of heroism and devotion on the part of Christian missionaries who worked and perished among the Indians, but there are few stories which reflect so much credit on Indian piety as that published from Quebec. Montagnais and Eskimos came from the southern shore of Hudson Strait to worship in the province of Quebec. This involved a tramp on foot of 1,000 miles through an inhospitable country, through forests, across rivers, mountains and lakes, to render a duty they owed to their religion.—Boston Transcript.

China and the Chinese know nothing of the names given to them by the English speaking world. The ancient name of China is Tien-Hia. When the present dynasty began its reign, then the whole country was called Ta-Tsing-Kwoh. Chang-Kwoh was the name given to that part known to Americans and English as the Middle Kingdom.
