NEW REVENUE SYSTEM THAT WILL PROTECT INDUSTRIES

Beveridge Tells What Republican Party Intends to Do in the Way of Revision.

Valley City, S. D., Oct. 2.—In a speech on the tariff here last night the Senator Beveridge told of what the Republican party intends to do in the way of revision. He said in part: "In the new tariff which we will make immediately after President Taft's inauguration we Republicans propose to reject alike the long since gray and toothless theory of a tariff for revenue only and the now half and crippled theory of a single protective tariff, and adopt instead of either a revenue system that will protect American industry and labor and at the same time win new markets all over the world for everything that American industry and labor produce."

It is true that Republican Boulois fought against any improvement of the protective tariff methods of twenty years ago; just as Democratic Hourbons fought and still fight for the revenue tariff methods of seventy years ago. The strongest protective theorists of our own party said, "Let us stay where we are now," the straight-out revenue theorists of the opposition said, "Let us go back two generations and stay where we were then." But only in the Republican party has there been any forward movement toward a modern tariff or the slightest study of twentieth century revenue conditions.

Three years ago some of us began this movement which deals with the facts of today instead of the theories of yesterday; and one of the pioneers of this movement for an up-to-date and business-like tariff is the man whom this business-like and up-to-date people will make their next president—William H. Taft.

Six months from now we Republicans will build this new and modern tariff according to the requirements of today. It will be a tariff for Maine alone, or for California alone, or for both in combination. It will be a tariff for the whole American people considered as one vast family or industry and trade dealing not among themselves alone, but dealing also with all mankind.

It will not be a log-roller's tariff on the one hand, made by politicians trading votes for this interest or that; nor a fanatic's tariff on the other hand, sacrificing all interests to an absurd theory. It will be a business-like tariff built on common sense and justice and based for the welfare of the American people alone. Such a tariff can be neither a straight-out revenue tariff nor a straight-out protective tariff.

A tariff for revenue only means a tax on imports that will bring the most revenue. But those articles like coffee, tea, chocolate, tropical fruits and many other things which all of our people consume and none of our people produce. Most Americans drink coffee, but coffee is not raised in the United States. We must have it, but we must import it; therefore a tariff on coffee would bring a greater revenue than on nearly any other article. So a tariff for revenue only means a tariff on coffee—a tax on the breakfast table. The opposition proposes a revenue-only tariff. Do they therefore propose a tariff on coffee, which would produce more revenue than any other article? If not, the whole tariff-for-revenue-only logic is surrendered. Will Mr. Bryan, Governor Johnson or any other member of the opposition explain this in logic in their reasoning? And what is true of coffee is true of tea, chocolate, tropical fruits and scores of other necessary articles like them.

That a tariff for revenue only means a tariff upon articles which all of us consume and none of us produce—articles which we must have, but can not raise or make, and therefore must import—is proved not only by logic, but by experience. Holland and the United Kingdom are the only two modern nations that have a tariff for revenue only, and both raise most of their revenue on articles like these. Have we lived a hundred years independent of England, only to begin to imitate her now?

Why will a revenue-only tariff not open new foreign markets to our products? Because it says to other nations, "You may come into American markets at our lowest possible rates of duty, but you need not let American products into your markets except at your highest possible rates of duty. We give you every trade advantage that we have to give, but we ask you to give us no trade advantage in return. Suppose any man dealt with other men in that way; suppose he endorsed every man's noise without asking security; give all other business men every advantage without bargaining for some business advantage in return—how long could such a man keep himself out of the bankrupt's court? If all nations had a revenue tariff there might be some argument why we should adopt the same thing; although even then such a tariff would place our manufacturers and workmen on the foreign level of work and wages.

FIREWORKS DISPLAY TOMORROW NIGHT

One of the Most Spectacular Features Ever Shown in the West Will be Presented.

The feature of entertainment on tomorrow's program will be the grand descriptive fireworks display which will be made from in front of the grandstand at the exposition grounds at 8:30 o'clock. Over 4,000 worth of spectacular and illuminating candles and rockets will be shot off, each one describing and having to do with the description of some of the many irrigation projects being made by the United States government. These displays have been wrought with a great deal of care and labor, and are marvelous in their depiction of scenes. A few of the scenes which will be presented are as follows:

Salute of thirteen aerial maroons, one each for the original states with "America" following, fired from a motor gun.

Fire firing of 100 three-pound exhibition rockets.

Display of 100 dragon nests in flights of twelve and twenty-four.

Display of six fountains, covering a space sixty feet square.

A flight of twelve four-pound golden cloud rockets.

A set of six pound hanging chain rockets.

A flight of six ten-pound electric mines fired simultaneously forming a sixty foot effect.

A simultaneous flight of 100 colored star rockets.

A magnificent display of twelve palm trees, set fifteen feet apart, forming a six piece effect 180 feet long.

A flight of six Jewell steamer rockets.

A simultaneous flight of twelve nine-inch meteoric shells of variegated color fired from twelve guns.

A set of six four-pound Old Glory rockets, showing national colors.

A display of six mammoth "Devil Among the Sailors" making a sixty foot effect.

A display of six union batteries of national colors 100 shots each.

A magnificent display of twelve Pencil gerbes having a 180 foot effect.

A display of six revolving umbrella fire exhibition size.

A display of six floral bomb shells.

An ascent of six four-pound canopy rockets.

The illumination of the exposition grounds by twenty-four prismatic lights, alternating red and green.

A display of six electric spreader batteries, ninety foot effect.

A simultaneous flight of thirty-six meteoric shells each nine inches in diameter in red, white and blue.

A display of six twelve-inch Neapolitan bomb shells, each breaking three distinct times in midair.

One set display representing an irrigated wheat field, sixty foot effect under fire.

A display of twelve cascades set fifteen feet apart, giving an effect of a beautiful bouquet 18 feet in diameter. Sixty mines of national colors.

One set piece in brilliant lance fire "Good Night" in twelve inch letters, decorated with diamond gerbes.
