Summary of War News of Yesterday

The relative positions of the allied armies and the Germans in the west remain much as they have been for weeks past, the official reports of the engagements indicating only slight gains or losses on either side.

The British government were ready to bind themselves to a pact of neutrality in regard to the Balkans. They were not prepared to pledge their neutrality in case of aggression by Germany.

The German chancellor spoke to the American correspondent of his efforts for years to bring about an understanding between England and Germany, which would have absolutely guaranteed the peace of Europe.
