Judge Cowing's Charge Thought by Some to Have Been Very Weak—A Young Woman Hugs and Kisses Hann—The Jury Out Just One Hour—An Agreement Reached in the Third Ballot—Nine Voted for Acquittal on the First Ballot, and Eleven the Second.

JUDGE COWING charged the jury in the trial of Policeman Edward Hann for the murder of Capt. Jack Hussey, in Part II. of the Court of General Sessions this morning.

Every man has a right to defend himself, but if you find that John Hussey died from other causes, then acquit him. It is not enough that the party believed himself in danger, but the facts and circumstances must be taken into consideration by the jury and they must decide whether there was reasonable ground for the belief in the imminence of this danger.

At the request of Mr. Howe, Judge Cowing charged that "where the people are more dangerous than to stand, a man must stand his ground and defend himself."

Other points were emphasized at Mr. Howe's request, and the case was given to the jury at 11 o'clock. The jury were out just one hour.

Foreman Carpenter responded to the usual question that the jury had agreed upon a verdict, and said: "We find the defendant, Edward Hann, guilty of the murder of Jack Hussey."

The jury was discharged and friends of Hann grasped his hand in congratulation. A young woman rushed up to him and throwing her arms about his neck, kissed him on the cheek.

DENIED BY DEPEW.

He Says the Vanderbilts Will Not Sell Their Stocks.

The Bears Fired a Gun Which, Though Not Loaded, Made a Great Noise.

A Published Interview with Him Creates a General Impression on the Street that the Vanderbilts Mean to Unload—Easy Money and Large Railway Earnings Fall to Check the Decline—Gossip on the Street.

An interview from St. Louis, published in a New York paper this morning, represented Chauncey M. Depew as saying that the shadow of a coming financial disaster was upon almost every enterprise, and that in especial very dangerous elements are threatening the business situation in the West.

Mr. Depew further predicted a great commercial disaster as the result of the prevalent real estate craze and a collapse in the value of railway securities.

Mr. Depew emphatically repudiated this interview by wire from St. Louis yesterday.

He denied having said anything to the reporter about a coming crash, but said: "I did think real estate in towns overdone, but not enough to affect the general prospects."

The Vanderbilt lines were never in a better financial and physical condition."

WALL STREET, Oct. 14. HE UPWARD turn in the stock market yesterday afternoon filled the bulls with false hopes.

There was a general impression around that the time had arrived when operators might safely venture to buy a few things that would show a quick profit, and acting on this theory many did get aboard when it was said that the Reading troubles had been adjusted.

The disappointment, therefore, was all the deeper this morning when it was found that circumstances had once more placed the bears in full control. The contradictory statements in regard to Reading matters created little surprise, as the Street had become a first-class bear market.

The bear market, however, was not so deep as the general impression was, and the market was not so far from a recovery as it appeared.

The result was a heavy and depressed condition of things during the greater part of the day. Scarcely any stock yielded less than 2 and a number of shares dropped 2 and 3 and during the greater part of the day the Stock Exchange was a veritable garden.

Easy money and large railway earnings made no difference to the traders, who sold right and left.

American Cotton Oil certificates were remarkable for a jump from 24 to 27.
