

White for Mourning Garb To Be Chiefly Expressive Of Conventional Grief

Mrs. Astor's Example Must Have Weight, but Ladies' Tailor Does Not Look for Society's Adoption of the Innovation This Season, Even in Younger Set.

Is white mourning about to take the place of the traditional black? It is so rumored. For instance, we are told on high authority that the young widow, Mrs. John Jacob Astor, will wear nothing but pure white for the next six months...

SAMUEL PAULL

with perhaps a black band round the sleeve, such as a man wears. A woman should always have at least a fringe of white next to her face, no matter how sombre her garb.

The Treatment of Tuberculosis

In its beginning Tuberculosis is a deceiving and hidden disease, and the failure to cure has been due to the inability to discover the real ailment until the disease became too far advanced.

What about this white mourning? I asked Mr. Paull. For some time tailors and dress-makers have been trying to introduce it," he replied. "We do not like to design and make all black costumes for women. The reason is that such suits and dresses are becoming comparatively too few. While they may be worn by some, from a sense of duty, they are worn reluctantly.

and deepest grief, she need not. But it should be perfectly proper for her to don any quiet shade.
