

TIP REFUSES TO BE KILLED.

not a drinker, but that he had a nervous affection that sometimes causes his movements and actions to seem queer to people who do not know him.

Another gentleman, who claimed to know Dr. Wright well, said he was a great student of natural history and also a collector of guns. He also said Dr. Wright had hunted elephants in their native jungles. Dr. Wright himself proudly left the park and could not be seen.

This caused a little diversion for a few minutes, and then all eyes were turned on Tip.

It was evident that the animal had swallowed a portion of the drug. Dr. Allen thought about an ounce.

He began to quiet down, and the doctor said that the drug was having a sedative effect. Then Tip backed up into the angle made by the iron bars and the side wall of his cage, and stood there with his haunches resting against the wall.

This, according to Dr. Allen, was an effect of the cyanide of potassium, which, acting on the brain, produces the first, a partial paralysis of the hind quarters.

Three more attempts were made to induce Tip to take the poison. Two mules and a half loaf of bread, all carried with the drug, were taken from the truck and tossed aside.

Tip continued to lean at intervals against the side of his cage, and at 2:32 began to retch.

He kept this up at short intervals until nearly 3 o'clock. Between the fits of retching he appeared to be stupid. Then he began to rally and seemed more like himself.

At 9 o'clock he did not appear to be suffering much inconvenience from the poison he had taken.

Dr. Allen, however, insisted that the animal had taken enough of the cyanide of potassium into his stomach to kill him eventually. The action of the poison was, however, slower than had been counted on, he said.

Commissioner Straus was evidently disgusted, and characterized the attempt on Tip's life as an unprofitable failure.

Soon Lively as Ever.

At 10:30 o'clock Tip had resumed his swaying motion and looked as if he didn't feel very bad about anything in particular. Supt. Hankinson went downtown and it was said that the Park Commissioners had decided to leave it to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals to show Tip should be put to death. Later it was said that Supt. Smith would be allowed to decide upon the means to be used.

Commissioner Straus assured an "Evening World" reporter that no further attempts on Tip's life would be made to-day.

Dr. Allen Disappointed.

five hundred men almost instantly. He was sure, he said, that the animal had swallowed at least an ounce of the poison which he and Dr. Hankington had decided was ample to kill the elephant. They had doubled the quantity as an extra precaution.

Dr. Allen at noon was still of the opinion that Tip would die from the effects of the dose given him. To a layman Tip seemed to be as lively as ever.
