UPTON SINCLAIR TELLS ABOUT THE SUFFERINGS OF THE WOMEN IN PACKINGTOWN

Third Article in the Series Which the Author of "The Jungle" Is Writing Especially for The Evening World.

CONDITIONS PAST BELIEF, BUT PROVED BY FACTS.

Politics and graft are so interwoven that the enforcement of laws is hopeless where money is to be made by the bosses.

The Evening World presents hereby the third article in the series written by Upton Sinclair, the author of "The Jungle," in which he is revealing how he obtained his information about the horrors of the Chicago slaughtering plant. The sufferings of the women in this enormous plant were not enough to compel work for the Beef Trust for the sake of the people, but they are often the entire family, as shown in the present investigation. Mr. Sinclair tells the whole story of the political graft and also the spread of socialism among the workpeople. The fourth article will be published next Monday.

BY UPTON SINCLAIR.

(From the Chicago Record Company, New York World.)

In my last article I stated something about the conditions under which the women work in the Chicago packing plant. I have men and women aged years, but they are all compelled to work by the company. The women are worked in every department of the plant, and are accustomed to work in the hot and unsanitary places. They are told to work longer hours than men, and are paid less for the work. The women are also subject to the same sufferings as the men.

Workers who work a whole life in the packing plant are still young, and they have to work in the hot and unsanitary places. They are told to work longer hours than men, and are paid less for the work. The women are also subject to the same sufferings as the men.

Socialism Spreads Among the Workmen.

Socialism is spreading among the workmen in the stockyards. The workmen are becoming aware of the conditions under which they work, and they are beginning to organize for better working conditions. The workmen are also becoming aware of the exploitation of the stockyard owners, and they are beginning to demand better wages and working conditions.
