

"A Voice in the Dark," recently put on at the Republic Theatre, is one of those "Who Did It?" plays. There is a murder and a lot of mystery that make it absorbing. William Boyd, Olive Wyndham, John Sharkey, Anne Sutherland and Frank Monroe, shown from left to right, are among the principals. Photo by White.

As the Red Cross Girl in the Nine o'Clock Ziegfeld Revue on the roof of the New Amsterdam Theatre, Edith Hallor is a distinct attraction. It is certainly some Red Cross costume. Photo Alfred Cheney Johnston.

"Chu Chin Chow," the extravaganza which created quite a sensation last winter, is to open up again soon, this time at the Century Theatre. Louise Bland as a dancer is to be one of the features.

Estelle Winwood, who plays the heroine of "Too Many Husbands," which A. H. Woods produces tomorrow night at the Hudson Theatre. Photo Campbell Studios.

In the galaxy of pretty girls in the Ziegfeld Follies, lo! Lillian Mackenzie's name stands among the first. This is one of her several striking costumes. Photo Alfred Cheney Johnston.

Thais Lawton, Edna James, Robert Barrat and Harrison Hunter in "The Crimson Alibi." This is another play in which the element of mystery is a factor, and it has pleased summer audiences. Photo by White Studio.