

SAYS HUSBAND HIRED SLEUTHS

Mrs. Arnold H. Dolder, Wife of Rich Importer, Watched by Five Funny Detectives When She Quit Home.

HAD QUARREL AND SHE TOOK CUILD WITH HER.

Comical Conduct of Hawkshaws in Front of Fifth Avenue House Caused Withdrawal of Espionage.

The mystery surrounding the movements of five comic opera sleuths, who have been working with every means of accompaniment but a brass band in front of No. 12 Fifth avenue for a week, was cleared to-day by Mrs. Arnold H. Dolder, wife of a wealthy lace importer. It was she whom the funny sleuths were shadowing, at the behest of her husband, whose home at No. 280 West Ninety-ninth street she left last Saturday.

"My husband," said Mrs. Dolder, "employed those men to watch me and my four-year-old daughter. I sent my daughter away last night and she is now with friends. There are differences between Mr. Dolder and myself and there will be no reconciliation."

Mr. Dolder is senior member of the firm of Dolder & Shaw, of No. 111 Fifth avenue. His home in West Ninety-ninth street is a fine house, magnificently furnished. According to a friend of the family a slight difference of opinion arose between Mr. Dolder and his wife some time ago, and out of it grew a quarrel.

Ordinarily the quarrel would have been forgotten, but something in the nature of both Mr. and Mrs. Dolder compelled frequent reference to the original cause of the dissension, until at last the originally trivial matter grew into a serious affair.

Wife Departs from Home with Child. The culmination came last Saturday, when Mrs. Dolder left the house with her daughter and went to live at No. 12 Fifth avenue, taking the apartments formerly occupied by Charles M. Oelrichs. She went to the lower Fifth avenue address in order to be near her friends, Mr. and Mrs. William A. Walling. Mr. Walling is her lawyer.

Her husband knew where she had gone. He went immediately to an up-town detective agency and engaged five trained sleuths—the superintendent said they were trained, but some of the people who watched the work say that they were overtrained. These Hawkshaws were ordered to shadow Mrs. Dolder and this child every time they left the house.

The detectives arranged their watches so that there were three of them on duty all the time. If Mr. Dolder was looking for secrecy he might as well have sent a company with red hats. Before the sleuths had been on duty two hours the whole neighborhood knew all about them.

At first they had a bicycle, which one of them used to trail Mrs. Dolder and the child when they went out. A handsome young woman called every day to see Mrs. Dolder and often took the little girl down to Washington square for a walk. The bicycle sleuth was trailing this young woman and the child one day when Mrs. Dolder left the house and walked up the avenue. This was an unforeseen contingency.

Cab Reinforces Bicycle. The three sleuths halted each other, like mariners at sea in a fog. The man on the bicycle didn't know whether to follow the child or Mrs. Dolder, and in his indecision he fell off his machine. To the relief of the watchers Mrs. Dolder entered Mr. Walling's residence, but after that there was a cab on duty in front of the house to reinforce the bicycle.

The detectives engaged a room in the Lafayette-Breville house, across the street from the apartment-house in which Mrs. Dolder was stopping, and one of them remained in the room continually, gazing across the street. At last the espionage became so ridiculous that the newspapers got hold of it and then the amusing detectives were withdrawn.

Mrs. Dolder's handsome young woman friend called on her yesterday evening, and when she went away took the little Dolder child with her. Dolder refused to reveal where the little one is, and Mr. Dolder won't say whether he knows where the child is, or whether he has any intention of discussing the affairs of his client, although Mrs. Dolder says that up to this time there have been no legal steps of any description taken.

BARTENDERS ARE RELEASED. Men Arrested for Selling Liquor Without License Go Free.

Summary action on the part of the State Excise Department to punish bartenders selling liquor under licenses claimed to have been cancelled by two convictions of employees was stopped by the Justices of Special Sessions today.

A half-dozen bartenders were arraigned charged with selling liquor without a license.

James J. Walsh, counsel for the Liquor Dealers' Association, opposed the prosecution of the men on the ground that the complaint was irregularly drawn and the prisoners, being merely employees, were not supposed to know how many of his predecessors in the place had been convicted of violating the Raines law. The Justices discharged the prisoner.

MAN'S BODY IN RIVER. Naturalization Papers Found with Name of Henry Foster.

The body of a man, in whose pocket was found naturalization papers issued to Henry Foster, was picked up from the East River at the foot of Corlears Slip and Water street.

The man was about forty-five years old, five feet eight inches in height, with light complexion and mustache. He wore a black suit, white socks and underwear, blue-striped shirt and tie. The naturalization papers were issued Oct. 12, 1887, in the Court of Common Pleas.
