Junior League Picturesquely Revives Old Songs in "Musical Milestones"

Society Applauds Annual Show Produced by Amateurs for Charity.

Members of the Junior League gave a delightful revival of old songs last night at their first presentation of "Musical Milestones, a Quarter of a Century of Song and Dance," in the ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria for the benefit of the league's welfare work. There was a large and fashionable audience present, and as the nature of the performance had been kept secret, keen interest was taken in each number of the programme. The talented amateur actresses of society had carried on their preparations with a secrecy worthy of David Belasco, and not until the premiere was much known about the new Junior show.

Not only were most of the debutantes of the season employed in the production, but as well many of the young married women who still keep up their membership in the Junior League, and as their assistants in the different turns there were some of the young dancing men of the day, also members of the Amateur Comedy Club. Miss Grace R. Henry had spent weeks in preparation of the entertainment and she had searched throughout the libraries of songs familiar to Broadway from 1895 up to date. The production was a musical hodge-podge, with no attempt at a plot.

First in the programme came the song made famous in its day by Miss Lottie Collins, "Ta-ra-ra Boom-de-ay," sung by Miss Abbie Morrison and a chorus that included Misses Lucy Bulkley, Elsie Morrill, Eleanor Fales Coward, Adelaide Kip Rhinelander, Eleanor Francke, Sylvia Lord Seymour, Genevieve Mangam and Virginia Sterry, who sang before a drop suggestive of a Bowery scene. Then came "The Sidewalks of New York," with a lot of street urchins, who sang "East Side, West Side, All Around the Town," led by Misses Adeline Hatch and Julia R. Shanley. The chorus included Misses Marion Carroll, Helen La Fetra, Janet Croll, Eleanor Landon, Betsy Flagg, Edyth McCoon, Elise Hughes and Mary Strange. Some of the girls were dressed as street lads and with the lassies skipped rope as they sang and played.

"The Bowery" Sung With Chorus.

Mr. Henry Clapp Smith of the Amateur Comedy Club made a hit in the old song "The Bowery," and others who accompanied him in ragged costumes were Mrs. Howland S. Davis, Mrs. J. Horton Ijams, Mrs. Herbert Maynard, Jr., Mrs. Armitage Whitman, Miss Katharine Davis, Dr. Armitage Whitman, Messrs. Howland S. Davis, J. Horton Ijams, Herbert Maynard, Jr., Harold W. Gould, Edmund P. Livingston, Arthur Townsend and Robert R. Livingston. This number was followed by a song suggestive of Miss Edna May's "Follow On" number in "The Belle of New York," sung by a bevy of Salvation Army lassies in regulation costume. The chorus included Mrs. Horace Hitchcock 3d, Misses Janet Brower, Marion Hodenpyl, Ruth Manierre, Dorothy Leary, Ruth Anderton and Isabel MacMillin.

Another old time song that met with approval was "Daisy Bell and Her Bicycle Built for Two," with Mrs. Irving H. Pardee and Mr. Paul H. Bonner, who led a chorus of bicyclists that included Mrs. Maynard C. Ivison, Mrs. H. Rudolph Kunhardt, Jr., Mrs. Coleman McGovern, Mrs. Leonard Wyeth, Miss Nathalie Slocum, Miss Caroline Wyeth, Messrs. Henry M. Eyer, Maynard C. Ivison, Thomas C. Lord, Kenneth T. Phillips, R. Sanford Saltus, Jr., and John Another popular song, "Dolly Grey," was sung by Mrs. E. Roland Harriman, Misses Anna R. Alexandre, Gretchen Damrosch, Sylvia Holt, Violet King, Curry Duke Mathews and Adelaide Sedgwick, Messrs. Gerald H. Beal, Waldron P. Belknap, Jr., Robertson P. Cleveland, Robert Crawford, Henry Sturgis and Ten Eyck Wendell, Jr.

"Florodora Sextet" Revived.

Miss Helen Hoadley began the second part of the programme by singing "After the Ball," and this was followed by the famous "Florodora Sextet," the costumes being faithfully copied from those worn by the original sextet, who set Broadway talking nearly twenty years ago. The double sextet included Misses Katharine Van Ingen, Marie Lamarche, Elizabeth Frank, Margaret De Forest, Alice Davison and Dorothy Clapp, Messrs. W. Herbert Adams, J. Holmes Daly, Herbert Maynard, Jr., Henry Clapp Smith, Julian Thompson and William John Warburton.

The sextet was followed by the "Merry Widow" waltz, which made a hit. It was danced by Mrs. S. Hinman Bird and Mr. Emerson MacMillin 3d, who had been coached by Donald Brian. After this in rapid succession there was a scene from "The Geisha," led by Miss Frederica Rhinelander and Miss M. Symphorosa Bristed. Another hit of the evening was made by Mrs. S. Hinman Bird, who sang a music hall favorite, "Yip-I-Addy-I-Ay." Another song that kept the audience in good humor was "In the Good Old Summer Time," the chorus led by Miss Beatrice Starr and Mr. Robertson L. Cleveland. Then Miss Helen Hoadley and Mr. William John Warburton in appropriate costume led a selection from "The Quaker Girl," and "The Yama Yama Man," a la Bessie McCoy Davis, was sung and danced by Misses Frances Ballard, Lucy Lord, Adeline Hatch, Genevieve Mangan, Dorothy Leary, Glory Thomas and Julia R. Shanley.

After this followed songs more up to date, "Over There," "Hindustan," "Smiles," "Indianola," "How Ya Gonna Keep 'Em Down on the Farm?" "Hawaiian Moonlight," "Chong" and "Mandy," all of which were familiar to the war camps. Among those in "Indianola," all of whom were dressed in Indian costume, were Mrs. Frank Washburn, Mrs. Elliott Phillips, Misses Elizabeth Harrison, Alice Hall, Mary Hurd, Helen Hess, Martha Keep, Gladys Livermore, Helen La Fetra and Helene Whitehouse. The entertainment ended with a song, "The Silent Rhapsody," music and words by Emerson MacMillin 3d and Miss Grace R. Henry, which was sung by Mrs. Bird, Mr. MacMillin and the entire cast.

Altogether it was a pleasing entertainment, recalling to the mothers and grandmothers of the debutantes who took part the musical hits of their own day. The performance will be repeated to-night and to-morrow night.

Among those who sang in the "Hawaiian Moonlight" song and who wore the typical costume of the islands were Mrs. Philip Kip Rhinelander, Mrs. Reginald T. Townsend, Mrs. J. Murray Mitchell, Jr., Misses Rita Boker, Frances Nott, Polly Damrosch, Janet Croll, Marion Cary Dinsmore, Grace Bristed and Hope Williams.

Miss Isabelle McPherson was among the singers of "Mandy," the others being the Misses Marian Carpenter, Betsy Flagg, Eleanor Fales Coward, Victorine Kellogg, Nina Dearth, Helena Ogden and Helen Dudgeon.

Girls of Society Play Ball Game at Palm Beach

Special to THE SUN AND NEW YORK HERALD.

PALM BEACH, Fla., March 2.—Something new in sports was introduced this afternoon when a team of girls, captained by Miss Phyllis Walsh, Florida tennis champion, played a baseball team made up of New York and Philadelphia men. Certain limitations were imposed to make the game an even contest. An indoor baseball was used. The men were forced to throw underhand and bat left handed. The men won, 9 to 8, after a contest replete with humorous situations. Miss Walsh, Misses Helen Bennett and Peggy Thayer played real ball for the "Amasons" and handled twenty-two of the twenty-seven putouts between them.

Fielding features for the "Lost Battalion" were contributed by Messrs. Bert Bell, Leonard Thomas and James Cromwell.

The lineup:

Amazons—Miss Walsh, catcher and pitcher; Miss Helen Bennett, pitcher and catcher; Quentin Feltner, second; Gertrude Thret, second; Mrs. Courland Richardson, short; Miss Katharine Force, short; Miss Constance Robertson, third; Mrs. Isaac Schlyeter, third; Mrs. H. P. Bingham, left; Miss Consuelo Vanderbilt, left; Miss Belle Baruch, centre; Miss Muriel Vanderbilt, centre; Mrs. John A. Rutherfurd, right, and Miss Madge Mulqueen, right.

Belgian Soprano Gives Recital.

Mme. Emma Van De Zande, a Belgian soprano, gave her first song recital here yesterday afternoon, in the Princess Theatre. She offered a programme of tasteful and much novel selection comprising Flemish songs, old French songs and modern Belgian and French lyrics. The Flemish and old French songs she explained before singing. Mme. Van De Zande's delivery fell short of artistic standards. Her voice has lost its freshness and it was poorly produced, but her interpretative power was noteworthy. She understood the sentiments underlying the texts of her songs, and she was able by accent and phrasing to communicate this to her hearers.

'Look Who's Here,' Farce With Music, Is Full of Action

44TH STREET THEATRE—"LOOK WHO'S HERE," book by Frank Mandel; lyrics by Edward Paulton; music by Sylvia Hein.

"Look Who's Here," a farce with music, presented last night at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre, although ostensibly frivolous, is deserving of a serious analysis. This for the reason that after a careful study of the somewhat garish and highly colored entertainment there actually seemed to be in it, somewhere, a semblance of revolution in musical comedy. Whether for better or worse, heaven only knows.

After a rather usual first act, notable only for something subtle startling in the general demeanor and eye-flashing of Miss Cleo Mayfield, a young woman who seems to have the hips of a child and the mind of a Cleopatra, the play and players simply bursted the accepted tenets and restrictions of what has become known as "bedroom farce," and launched forth into revelry inconceivable. Yet such was the loud joviality with which the coverlets were kicked about and the utter confidence with which the players said anything they wished that the "house" seemed willing to commit itself as indorsing the whole amazing business.

In fact, after the most cruelly bold line of all the audience burst forth in simple, whole hearted laughter. So there you are. Ours not to reason why.

For instance a corset, the simple appearance of which properly worn albeit a bit carelessly laced, made the musical comedy "Flo Flo" a few years ago, was in this musical comedy tossed, not to say twirled about as though it were nothing at all. This took place in a bedroom scene in which there were duplicats beds. The motif of the scene was sounded by the remark of Cecil Lean, the chief player, who when he found that the youngish woman, distracted with surprise, in the other bed was not his own wife, shouted with almost hysterical joviality:

"You're in your right mind, but in the wrong bed."

With such quips and turns of gayety the play progressed, and the audience, which indeed seemed unusually respectable for the greater part, seemed overjoyed, though some were indignant.

Miss Mayfield has progressed amazingly, though in just what direction is not clear, since "The Blue Paradise," in which she first appeared with Mr. Lean. He grinned and showed his eighty-two teeth until he had everybody grinning with him. There were some excellent singers who had fairly good songs, but they lacked the vigorous personality of these two.

Except the Misses Alicia and Mary McCarthy, two grievous urchins, who without doubt started in the freight yard circuit in Omaha, knocked the milk bottles off the windowsills in Tenth avenue with their stuff and now have crashed into Broadway and made a hit.

The hero, portrayed by Mr. Lean, was a popular author of whom they said, "He made the world blush and bored his wife to death." Silvio Hein wrote the music, Frank Mandel the book, Edward Paulton the lyrics.

Russian Folk Songs Heard.

Mme. Maria Winetzkaja, a mezzo soprano not unknown here in concert, who has appeared in opera in many of the Spanish countries where she often sang the title role of "Carmen," gave a song recital at Carnegie Hall last evening. With a fine, powerful voice she was far more successful in a group of folk songs of the Ukraine, sung in Russian, than she was in Meyerbeer's air, "Ah, Mon Fils," where the style was not finished nor the pitch always accurate. A singer of temperament, she imparted good musical feeling to her work. Her list included a varied group of modern Russian art songs, sung in Russian, and the late Reginald de Koven's "Norman Cradle Song." Miss Rhea Silberta, who arranged one of the folk songs and had her own song "Yohrzeit" in the final group, played the piano accompaniments, but she failed to give the singer an adequate support.

Moeller's 'Sophie,' New Sex Play, Is Exceeding Broad

"Sophie" is the familiar title of the latest play by Philip Moeller, produced at the Greenwich Village Theatre last night. The work is itself familiar, so the name is not out of its key. The three acts are taken from the private—indeed, very private—life of the famous Sophie Arnould who played an important part in the chapter of musical history that includes the introduction of Gluck's operas to the world. The soprano "created," as the world of the cabotin puts it, the heroine of "Iphigenie en Aulide." The scenes of the drama, indeed, cluster about this artistic achievement. But it is only the frou-frou of her stage life that one hears in the play. It is the heart of Mlle. Sophie rather than the vocal cords which seem to have been uncommonly efficient even for the professional beauties of that gallant era that inspires the drama.

Mr. Moeller has made a wise selection of a new puppet from the past of French history who could do justice to the Moeller idiom. The singer, who seems to have been devoted to so much more than her art, is a picturesque and alluring figure. How truly historical this document does not appear, although it is said that the life of the noted original might have supplied inspiration to many playwrights. Mr. Moeller has, however, endowed her with many traits traditionally associated with the operatic character.

A Day in Sophie's Life.

She is found when the play begins in her drawing room, which happens to be in the palace of the Austrian Ambassador, and there she stays during the play, which is not so singular as it sounds when one knows that she has settled herself there for reasons of policy connected with the first performance of Gluck's opera. She did not win the honor of singing the music of its heroine without a struggle which would have been accounted unconventional to-day in operatic methods. But her sojourn in the embassy is declared to be quite as innocent of evil as that famous version of "La Dame aux Camellias," once popular in Boston, in which the two lovers were vaguely referred to as engaged. It is when the Ambassador insists on a change in the arrangement that what might under other circumstances be described as the "plot" of the play begins.

But it is such a little plot that it neither interferes with the revelation of Sophie's many interests nor Mr. Moeller's polished language. There is a great deal of Mr. Moeller's language and it is all highly polished. It has, moreover, the merit of sounding very much the same whoever may speak it.

Miss Stevens as French Singer.

It fell to Miss Emily Stevens to reincarnate for this day the brilliant favorite of eighteenth century Paris. She can deliver the Moeller dialogue with the swiftness and point that give it effect, she can even make it or any other speech incomprehensible if necessary. The moods and affectations of the prima donna are also well suited to her powers. Luckily the singing and speaking voice are not always similar, else it might have been difficult to explain the musical fame of this heroine.

Mr. Moeller's latest play is inferior to the two longer works that preceded it. "Sophie" is by no means without distinction. The intrigue, however, is trivial, too trivial to persuade the audience into any sense of illusion. It all seemed like opera bouffe until Adolf Link appeared; then it seemed—well, like something else. There is less wit than usual in the lines, which are highly oversexualized and constantly reveal how doggedly the author stalked the double meaning.

O. P. Heggie was a singular choice for the ardent lover. He acted like a man walking in his sleep and conscious only of the hope that the play was bound to end soon and that he would be well out of it then. As an impudent lackey Sidney Toler nearly burst with the knowledge that he had one of the best parts in the play and was bound to make an impression. This too obvious certainty interfered with the impression he might have made. Hubert Wilke gave a graphic portrait of Gluck. Some day he will play Richard Wagner and make a fortune. After all, a profile helps at any age. Link exaggerated grotesquely the role of the Austrian diplomat.

George C. Tyler, who produced the play, had supplied an exquisite boudoir in eighteenth century style, and Miss Helen Dryden designed some beautiful dresses of that period. But Mr. Tyler showed his managerial genius in selecting the comparative seclusion of Greenwich Village for the play.

PLAYS SUITE BY MOOR.

Chamber Music Society Presents Interesting Programme.

The second concert of the New York Chamber Music Society took place last evening in Aeolian Hall. The programme consisted of Emanuel Moor's suite in A major for double quintet, Saint-Saens's caprice on Russian and Danish airs for piano, flute, oboe and clarinet, and the Brahms piano quartet in G minor. Emanuel Moor is a composer who exercises a strange fascination upon chamber music organizations, a fascination which does not often extend itself to audiences.

The composition heard last evening is written for string quintet and a wind quintet, consisting of flute, oboe, clarinet, horn and bassoon. It is music of the study, carefully wrought, balanced, smooth, perfectly respectable and generally soporific. The capable artists engaged in its performance did not appear to be thrilled by their task but manfully persisted till with the slow march of time the end was reached and the audience indulged in polite approval.

There was more joy over the two other compositions. The work of Saint-Saens is by no means as familiar as that of Brahms, but, like all the creations of the French master, it is melodious and pleasing. Both works were commendably played.
