

SWELLS AT A FIGHT. HE OPENED HIS ARTERIES.

Well-Known Clubmen Present at a Quiet Little Knock-Out. Mike Breslin Beats George Bowie in Five Short Rounds.

Fought in a Stable on the Banks of the Hudson River. Small groups of well-groomed, well-ted and alert-looking club men gathered mysteriously in the smoking-room of New York's most prominent athletic club last night and exchanged confidences in hushed tones.

It was necessary to take a train to reach there, but that isn't saying that the select circle who made the trip had to go beyond the confines of New York City.

What was up? Just one of the most entertaining, most quietly arranged and conducted prize fights that has ever been brought about from Manhattan Island. And such an ideal place, too, for a mill!

A spacious mansion on an eminence, one of the highest that stretch along the banks of the Hudson, the house almost entirely hidden from view by the thick growth of the garden.

Recently Carl took of those same well-groomed gentlemen fitted through the tree-covered grounds and disappeared into the folds of the big stable, where a stabled and roped arena was erected in the center.

At the special request of the exchange contributed generously; clubmen were well represented; and the night was a grand success.

One of the timekeepers fancied it is slightly hard work to manage a crack snapper, but he soon found that the other had been known to bet "margin" to mountain on a knock-out.

"Are you ready?" queried the snapping-eyed referee. "All ready," came from the stable-room, and came Billy Murray, the ex-amateur of the championship of New York, and Jack Spera, similarly equipped at Philadelphia.

"Now, gentlemen," announced the big-voiced seventh regiment man. "These boys will give you a fine show, and they will do their best to please you, so kindly refrain from any outbursts or remarks that might reflect on our honorable opponents."

The young spectators didn't tarry long in their enthusiasm to please. They succeeded almost immediately, and the fight was over in five rounds with a bang and a flourish.

Barber Jacob Boehm's Desperate Attempt at Suicide.

A Physician Accused of Refusing to Attend the Dying Man. Jacob Boehm, a barber, with a small shop at 2165 Second avenue, attempted to commit suicide this morning by opening the artery in both of his arms.

The police accuse a physician in the neighborhood of having coolly and calmly refused to attempt to save the man's life simply because he did not think there was any money in it for him.

Boehm, has long been a sufferer from chronic asthma. He awoke about 7 o'clock this morning and complained that he could not breathe, and that he had pain in his head and chest.

His doctor wife prepared a bowl of salt water and gave her husband garlic his throat while she went out to get food for breakfast.

Boehm did as his wife directed, and as it seemed to relieve him, Mrs. Boehm left to make her purchases.

She returned in about fifteen minutes. Her two children were in the kitchen covering in a corner.

Groans were heard from the room where Mrs. Boehm had left her husband. The woman gave a hasty look into the bedroom, and seeing her husband covered with blood shrieked and rushed from the place.

Her cries alarmed other people in the house and it was soon learned that Boehm had cut an artery in each arm, with a razor which one of the children brought him from the shop.

Among the neighbors who crowded into Boehm's apartment was a Mrs. Teresa Heilage. She had a residence of mind enough to seek medical help, and she rushed to the nearest physician she could find.

This happened to be Dr. F. C. Johnson, of 210 East one hundred and seventh street.

The doctor was in bed, but he opened the window in response to Mrs. Heilage's violent ring. "Doctor, come quick!" Mr. Boehm, the barber, called out from his bed.
