TRoublesome NIGHBORS.

Oh, could there in this world be found some little spot of happy ground where a life pleasure sought go round without the village tattling; Where doubly beat that spot would be, where all might dwell in harmony, free from the bitter misery of gossip's endless prattling.

If such a spot were really known, fair peace might claim it as her own, and in it she might fix her throne forever and forever; There like a queen to reign and live, while every one would soon forgive the little slights they might receive, and be offended never.

To mischief-makers that remove far from our hearts the warmth of love, and lead us all to disapprove, what gives another pleasure? They seem to take one's part, but when they've heard our cares, unkindly then they soon recall them all again, mixed with their poisonous measure.

And then they're such a cunning way of telling ill-meant tales; they say: "Don't mention what I've said; I pray; I would not tell another!" Straight to your neighbor's house they go, narrating every thing they know, and break the peace of high and low, wife, husband, friend and brother.

Oh, that the mischief-making crew were all reduced to one or two, and they were painted red or blue, and that every one might know them, then would our villagers forget to rage and quarrel, fume and fret, or fall into an angry pet. With things so much below them.

For 'tis sad, degrading part, to make another's bosom smart, and plant a dagger in some heart, we ought to love and cherish. Then let us evermore be found in harmony with all around, while friendship, joy and peace abound, and angry feelings perish. -N. Y. Sun.

MARRIAGE A SUCCESS.

An Old Soldier Proves That Women Have No Cause for Complaint. Walking along Lake Shore, writes a Chicago Journal reporter, with an old soldier who had married thrice, and for money every time, I had some new and valuable light shed upon the question, "Is marriage a failure?" The warrior takes an easy view of life. He is inclined to think that women are not as bad as they are painted, but that they require strong handling. "The marriage laws are much too easy on women. Now look here! I'm a man of family—I mean social position. I have an income of between 12,500 and 25,000. 'Tisn't much, but as Shakespeare says, 'tis mine own. I married a widow for my first wife. She had $5,000 a year of her own, and no social position, as her first husband was a saloon-keeper. I got her into refined and fashionable society. How did she repay me, thank you? Well, she insisted upon spending all her own coin upon herself, and then demanding half of my little income. Wasn't that pretty cheeky? She got every thing and gave nothing—save the $5,000 a year when she died to a twenty-second cousin near Prince Bismarck's home in Pomerania. My second wife was in her second widowhood, but not a bit softer about money matters than when she was a maiden fair. Every thing settled upon herself. I paid for the wedding breakfast. She had a large income and she never gave me a cigar. She went to heaven and left her money to a sister. The sister wouldn't marry me, but I got a nice little woman, with four children, who had buried three husbands and was as merry as a butterfly. She is alive now and is the hardest nut of all. She doesn't take half my money—she takes the whole of it; pays my bills, and allows me half a dollar a day for spending money. No sir; marriage was no failure—for the three women who had the good fortune to marry me."

A LITTLE FORESIGHT.

Why It is of More Use Than An Unlimited Quantity of Afterthought. A little foresight is of more value than much afterthought, says the Sunday-School Times. Foresight is the planner, afterthought is the critic, of our deeds. What painful scenes, embarrassments, regrets, disappointments, self-accusations, the habit of looking ahead and planning to meet and to avert the future will avoid! Time and money spent in building a perfect house before embarking in any new project, in mapping out work, in arranging engagements, in avoiding conflicts of duty and the impossible demand to be in two places at one time, are well spent. But the foresight is more difficult than the afterthought. The one requires intense application to systematic consideration and search of the field of the possible; the other suggests itself instinctively and naturally. Any body can see that the door is in the wrong place after the house is built, or can say that the speech was a mistake after it had been delivered and its effect noticed. It is easier to criticize well than to construct well; but it is more useful to construct a plan perfectly beforehand, than to criticize it afterwards.

Victoria's First Hoop-Skirt. The following anecdote is told to illustrate the readiness with which Parisian fashions are adopted, even by the most rigidly patriotic of Princesses. At the epoch of the arrival of Queen Victoria in Paris in 1856, on a visit to the Emperor and Empress, the latter had just brought hoop-skirts into vogue. The Queen forthwith sent her a messenger to purchase one for her, and on her next approach before her Imperial host and hostess her skirts were expanded into the new and fashionable amplitude. But her Majesty had not comprehended the necessary methods of tying the tapes that held the hoops in place, and her crinoline presented an extraordinary and shapeless aspect. It was the Emperor himself who, with his own imperial hands, set the rebellious petticoats to rights, and gave his royal guest a lesson as to the proper method of donning the new-fashioned adjunct of feminine costume.
