OUR NAVY.—The United States navy at present consists of 177 vessels, of which sixty-nine are iron clads, twenty-nine sailing ships, and twenty-eight tugs. Of the ninety-nine steamers and sailing vessels, thirty-four, carrying in the aggregate 382 guns, are on duty in various fleets; forty-six are laid up; one is on the lakes; six are unassigned, and the remaining twelve are used as receiving ships or on special duty. The monitors and ironclads are laid up at League Island, Washington and New Orleans. The monitor Terror, however, is attached to the North Atlantic fleet. The majority of the forty-six vessels laid up can be prepared for sea at a small expense whenever Congress shall authorize additional seamen to man them. The thirty-four vessels engaged in cruising are distributed as follows: Nine in the Pacific fleet, eight in the Atlantic, seven on the European, six in the North Atlantic, and four in the South Atlantic.

NEW TELEGRAPH LINE.—Says the White Pine News of the 13th inst: The telegraph wire, to be used upon the line from here to Pioche, arrived here yesterday. We are informed that all the post holes have been dug, and that the posts are being rapidly set along the line, ready to receive the wire. It is expected the line will be completed in about two weeks, and ready to transmit messages.
