ROLE OF STRIKEBREAKER

ASSUMED BY FEDERAL COURTS WHEN THEY REVERSE IMPORTANT DECISIONS WHICH IF PERMITTED TO STAND OUTLAW ALL STRIKES

In cases involving Big Interests It is Held that Manufactur- ing is Not Commerce, But in "Labor" Case It is Held Otherwise.

Kansas City, Mo., Oct. 29.

These are not merely the words of a single man. They are the words of a whole group which believes that the United States was re-

American plan and the "American plan" and the agreement or combination is entirely done away with.

The decisions, if upheld, mean that the strike was the logical and necessary thing about whether the business of interstate commerce is a matter for state or interstate jurisdiction.

The decisions, if upheld, mean that the strike was the logical and necessary thing about whether the business of interstate commerce is a matter for state or interstate jurisdiction.

Interestingly, the court's decision was based on the fact that the strike was not a boycott, but rather a refusal to perform certain duties as a result of economic pressure.

The court held that the strike was a lawful and necessary action for the safety of the workers and the public, and that it did not violate the laws of interstate commerce.

Moreover, the court stated that the strike was a direct result of the efforts of the employees to protect their rights and ensure their safety.

The decision reflects the court's view that the rights of the workers are paramount in ensuring the safety and integrity of the workplace.

In conclusion, the court's decision highlights the importance of worker safety and rights in the context of the interstate commerce.

Furthermore, it underscores the need for a balanced approach to labor relations, ensuring that both the rights of workers and the interests of commerce are safeguarded.

The decision is a significant milestone in the history of labor law, setting a precedent for future cases and shaping the landscape of labor relations.

The court's ruling serves as a reminder of the critical role that worker safety and rights play in maintaining a fair and just society.
