The Yoke of Gold vs Equality.

Joshua—Well neighbor as near as I can see through this "single gold standard" scheme, it is like an eccentric old farmer I one time knew who had a yaller steer, he wanted to brake to the yoke.

Samuel—Neighbor I think your reasoning sound for the two metals on an equality makes a gospel yoke and easy to be borne.

Fabio Romani.

A brief synopsis of the great master piece which will be presented to Logan theatre goes next Thursday evening March 23rd will we believe interest our readers, and Alden Benedict's Fabio Romani is a fine creation.

Fabio Romani is a tale of the dead, founded first and last upon the Judas like duplicity of woman. Mr. Alden Benedict as Fabio Romani, the wronged husband and implacable avenger, gives a powerful representation of the part.

Miss Martha Beauford as Nina, the wife of the virtuous, trusting, studious, rich Fabio, the woman who bartered her all for the love of gold, must be seen to be appreciated. Nina is one of the most remarkable impersonations we have upon the stage.

Grace Hunter in her Spanish drama in a dream of the poetry of grace and motion; save Carmencita she has no rival on the stage. The remainder of the large cast is strong and even, the costumes are rich and the stage settings magnificent.

New York, March 15.—Roland Burnham Molineux, has been identified at the Poison Inquest, as not only the lessee of the letter box hired in the name of "H. C. Nicholas A. Heckman, who rented the letter box to "H. C. Barnett" at No. 257 West Forty-second street, made an extraordinary dramatic scene by identifying Molineux as the man who rented the box.

The identification of the handwriting as that of Molineux was made by W. J. Kinsley, handwriting expert. He declared that the writing in the "Barnet" and "Cornish" letters, the poison address and the undisputed handwriting of Molineux were by the same hand.

Later—Roland Burnham Molineux is in a cell in the Tombs, accused by the verdict of the Coroner's Jury of sending to Harry S. Cornish the poison that killed Mrs. Katherine Adams on Dec. 28 last.
