FORT DONELSON IS OURS!

Fifteen Thousand Prisoners.

PILLOW, JOHNSTON AND BUCKNER TAKEN.

Hallelujah! Let us rejoice and be exceeding glad, for we have triumphed gloriously. Fort Donelson is ours and the Stars and Stripes wave in all the pride of victory over the fifteen thousand rebels captured by our brave western boys. Pillow has again dug his ditch on the wrong side, and buried himself in it; Johnston has migrated from the inaction of Dixie army of the Potomac to find himself unequal to the contest with Gen. Grant and Commodore Foote, while Buckner fled from the extended armies of Buel only to find a lodgment within the grasp of Halleck. The stronghold has fallen and to day the whole country is wild with exulting excitement, and hoarse in shouting for our victories "in the name of Continental Congress and the Great Jehovah."

Fifteen thousand prisoners! an army of themselves, and with them, three of the best generals the rebels can procure. General Johnston was, with the exception perhaps of Beauregard, the ablest General in the rebel army. When the war in Kentucky became serious, and the Mississippi valley was threatened, Gen. Johnston was sent out as the Napoleon before whom the "cowardly Yankees" would flee like sheep, or be cut down like grass. Johnston was at Fort Donelson as the grand point of defense.—Bowling Green could be evacuated, Fort Henry could be given up with comparative ease, but Fort Donelson must be held at all hazards, and so three Generals, all brave, able and popular, were there to inspire their men and to bring all their military skill to bear in its defense. They fought well, and the terrible havoc they made in the ranks of the Federal army will send desolation to tens of thousand of loving hearts in the unflinching Northwest, but all their strength could not uphold them against the attacking force.

There was another creature in the fort who was dubbed a General, but who is better known to our readers as Floyd the Thief. True to his cowardly and thieving nature, he sneaked away from his share in the fight, and stole away with his whole brigade. It is pleasant, even in the mortification of his having escaped the clutches of our justice-loving soldiers' to know that the rebels in the Fort, who fought bravely to the end, denounced him as a black-hearted traitor and coward. We can only hope that if he is not captured by our troops, he will be compelled to creep ignominiously over mountains, and through valleys, and into dark caves, with these fitly applied words forever ringing in his ears, so that no cotton which he may steal from some poor negro may shut out the sound.

We are absolutely startled as we think of the victories of the past month. So closely have they followed upon each other's track that we can hardly give the details of one before the announcement of a later one makes the former stale. Garfield's victory, the Mill Spring rout, the Fort Henry capture, the re-occupation of Springfield, the capture of Roanoke, the advance upon Savannah, the evacuation of Bowling Green, and the capture of Fort Donelson make up a chapter of victories which we are proud to inscribe upon the historic page. And what must be the terrible despondency and despair of the rebels who thus see and feel the avenging arm of an offended government.

No danger of a foreign interference, if we go on at this rate. Each one of these successes for the Federal arms is more convincing than a dozen manifestos or a score of arguments upon international policy, as to the hopes of the rebels and the justice of the Federal cause.

A rebel report says that Floyd was taken with the other Generals. If this is so, we may venture to offer the flag-staff upon our Square as a suitable place on which to hang the "black hearted traitor and coward."

General Burnside.

It need cause no great surprise that Gen. Burnside has not yet forwarded an account of his victories. He is a man of deeds rather than words. It is his strong characteristic. This was shown by his speech on the reception of the flag presented to him at Washington at an early period in the war. After the spokesman of the donors had delivered a flattering speech, and had presented the flag, Burnside received it with an expression of satisfaction on his countenance, made a courteous bow, and said, "Very much obliged to you! very much obliged to you! MOVE ON HER." That is it. No words to spare. "Move on men." That is what we want at this special emergency. Burnside, instead of consuming time in blazoning his deeds in official dispatches, is doubtless busy securing the full fruition of his victory by "moving on his men."

SAVANNAH IS OURS!

ANOTHER VICTORY

As will be seen elsewhere, Savannah has surrendered to Commodore Dupont! Three more cheers for this noble Commander and our noble navy! Let the bells ring, the people shout, the cannon roar, the bonfires blaze and the Star Spangled Banner and Yankee Doodle be sung and played until the breezes of the Rocky Mountains bring back the patriotic echo. Hip, hip, hurrah!

Hon. B. F. Wade.

We publish, on the first page of this (Tuesday's) paper, a letter from Washington to a cotemporary, touching the standing of Hon. B. F. Wade at Washington. It corroborates the statements heretofore made in these columns, that no man in Washington is so much sought for in conference by the President the Secretary of War and the Commanding General, as Senator Wade. We made the statement that scarcely a day passes without Mr. Wade being sent for by one of these parties. We made the assertion advisedly, and we here repeat that not a man in Washington (and for that matter, in the whole country) is so much consulted by the Administration (including the Cabinet) as Mr. Wade. And while we hear that hostile parties—an attache of the Plain Dealer being one of them—are still circulating the false reports that he is in disfavor at Washington we dare and defy them to prove their assertions. We know and they themselves know that such reports are false. In connection with this matter, we find in the Cincinnati Gazette, an able article upon the Senatorial question, touching upon the much boasted theme of "conservatism" which is the pet hobby of the enemies of Mr. Wade. We commend it to the careful consideration and fair judgment of every voter and of every legislator. Those legislators will have to answer to their constituents for their position upon this important matter, and it behooves them to set aside no earnest, vigorous, experienced and popular statesman, for any timid, inexperienced man, upon the ground of pretended "conservatism."—When we are charging bayonets upon our country's enemy, it is no time to supersede the officer who has pluck, energy and the confidence of the army he leads, by a new man of whom they know little, and whom the enemy will fear less than his predecessor.

The Gazette says:

> He is the most conservative man who is most determined in the suppression of this rebellion. A conservative in political affairs, is one who would preserve the Government in all its integrity, and with all its liberties. One who would palter with rebellion, or go half way with it, or come reluctantly and tardily in to the support of the Government, is to just that extent a destructive: to that degree he has gone for breaking down his Government. On the contrary, the man who took the most determined stand for preserving and vindicating the power of the Government, and for summarily putting down by all necessary means every resistance to it, and every symptom of rebellion, is the true conservative.
>
> We make these remarks because there is a recent custom of applying the term conservative to weakness, lukewarmness in public affairs, cold-hearted selfishness, cowardice, concessions to rebellion, reluctance, tardiness and conditions in the support of the Government in a civil war, and a softheartedness toward the most atrocious rebellion the world ever saw. In the Border Slave States secession is called conservatism, and in the North it has become common to apply this term to those who are believed to have no heart in the cause of the nation.
>
> When was ever a nation saved from peril by seeking out those who were coldest and most tardy in the national defense, and placing them at the head of affairs? What nation would deserve preservation which had become so demoralized as to set aside its earnest, devoted patriots, and put in power those best known for their early sympathies with the enemy, and their slowness in declaring for the defense of their country? Suppose that in the war for our national independence, the reluctant and lukewarm in the revolution had been made chief in counsel and command, would our independence have been accomplished? Would the fathers have deserved success? Will this nation now, in a peril equally as great, be likely to succeed, in saving itself from this rebellion, if it sets up the demoralising standard that earnest, whole hearted, patriotic zeal, from the first, in conserving the Government against rebellion, is too radical to be entrusted with the management of the Government or the conduct of the war, and that none but those who went half way with rebellion, or who are most reluctant and latest in their support of the Government must be allowed to represent the people in it, or to have any voice in the conduct of the war?
>
> Certainly the national peril is great enough to demand earnestness in our national counsels. Certainly the time when great political parties in Ohio sink their partizan division to unite for the most earnest and vigorous prosecution of the war to put down rebellion, is not the time, and they are not the elements, to oppose those who have distinguished themselves by their earnestness, zeal and ability in the cause, and to fill their place with those whose recommendation is the lack of these qualities. If there is one man pre-eminent for this determined zeal, energy, boldness and unswerving integrity in the cause of the country from the very first, he is the man for a Union organization, which was formed on the sole principle of a vigorous and determined prosecution of the war, to elect to the Senate of the United States. If there is a man in whom through all the doubts and discouragements of the people during the war, the popular heart had always implicit confidence, he is the man for a legislature of the people to elect to the Senate in this hour of our country's distress.

"Smite it in the Name of God."

From an eloquent speech delivered in Congress by Representative Geo. W. Julian, we extract the closing paragraph:

> SMITE IT IN THE NAME OF GOD!
> Sir, this rebellion is a bloody and frightful demonstration of the fact that slavery and freedom cannot dwell together in peace.—The experiment has been tried thoroughly, perseveringly, and with a patience which defied despair, and has culminated in civil war. We have pursued the spirit of conciliation to the very gates of death, and yet the "irrepressible conflict" is upon us, and must work out its needed lesson. This black conspiracy against the republic, which has armed half a million of men in its work of treason, piracy and murder—this magnificent spectacle of total depravity, made easy in real life, is the crowning flower and fruit of our partnership with the "sum of all villainies." All the crimes and horrors of this struggle for national existence cry out against it. In the fires of the revolution which it has kindled, it has painted its own character with a pencil dipped in hell. The lives sacrificed in the war it has waged, the agencies of the battle-field, the bodies and limbs mangled and maimed for life, the widows and orphans made to mourn, the moral ravages of war, the waste of property, the burning of bridges, the robbery of forts, arsenals, navy yards and mints, the public sanction and practice of piracy, and the imminent peril to which the cause of free government throughout the world is subjected, all write their deep brand upon slavery as a thirstless outlaw, and plead with us to smite it in the name of God.

From the Advance.

GREEN RIVER, KY, Feb. 13.

MOVING ON.

This vast division is as busy as a swarm of bees in mid-summer. Orders have been issued to prepare seven days rations, and be ready to march to-morrow morning at six o'clock. One of the grandest moves on the great military chess board is about to be made. Gen. Mitchell's division moved this morning before daylight toward "Dixie," and undoubtedly ere long will confront the foe before Bowling Green; and, it is said, will be able to capture two or three thousand sick, married, &c., all others having fled to parts unknown.

I shall reveal no secret, I presume, by saying that three Brigades of this Division will go down the Ohio river and up the Tennessee, and be thrown in the rear of Columbus, or carried away up into Alabama. Thus a force, from 10,000 to 12,000 will suddenly and unexpectedly throw to the breeze the "old time honored flag," in the very center of the rebel kingdom, and by the help of God they will keep it there.—When you hear from me again it will be from some other part, and in all probability from scenes of stirring interest.

FLAG OF TRUCE.

Yesterday Gen. Johnson, accompanied by a few chosen officers, went South, having a white flag. The object was to make arrangements for an exchange of prisoners, having special reference to Capt. Prime, and Major Helveti, taken a few months ago. Col. Willich is very anxious for the exchange of his men taken in the ckirmish on the opposite side of the river. Col. Gibson of this regiment was among those who accompanied the flag; he says they went three miles beyond Cave City before they came to their Patrols, showing clearly that they have fallen back, since your correspondent accompanied the body of Zollicoffer to their lines. They first met a party of the notorious Texan Rangers, who while they seem to have little or no honor at all, yet have thus far faithfully observed the sacred character of the flag of truce. The Colonel says they are the same reckless mob we have always represented them to be, men for whom he could not feel a particle of respect. They have greatly added to their work of ruin within a few days, cursing and blighting neighborhoods they can no longer occupy. No less than sixty horses in one settlement have been killed and thrown into watering places by them. Let us hope that Gen. Mitchell and his brave men will have an opportunity to inflict proper chastisement, and that rebels everywhere will be brought to certain punishment. EUROPUS, 49th O.

The Iron Plated Steam Batteries.

Plans and specifications have been prepared in the Bureau of Construction of the Navy Department for the twenty iron-plated gun boats which Congress has ordered. We have before us these elaborate papers, which are much too long to print entire, and besides possess in their minute details no particular interest to the public. From them, however, we condense the following abstract and description of one of these proposed "iron-plated steam batteries."

The length of the vessel is to be two hundred and sixteen feet and two inches; extreme breadth, forty-eight feet; and depth of hold amidships, thirteen feet eleven inches. The hull is to be built throughout with white oak, and copper-fastened to within five feet of the top of the deck. The deck-planks are to be of white oak, five and one half inches thick and nine inches wide. On this deck there will be deck lights, fitted with shutters to make them water tight from below, and two conning houses, (for guiding the ship,) one at each end, which are to be of wrought iron plates, rough in form, of two feet diameter in width, and forty-six inches high. the sides to be six inches thick, composed of one thickness of four inch and one of two inch iron. The lid of the box is to be four inches thick. At ten inches below the bottom of this cover, the insides are to be pierced with four tapering peep-holes, five inches in diameter on the outside, and six inches on the inside. while three inches lower down there will be, in intermediate spaces, four other peep-holes.

The armament of the vessel is to be contained in two revolving "Cole-towers," whose outside diameter is to be twenty one and one-half feet, and hight somewhat over eight feet. The towers are to be composed of two thicknesses of wrought-iron plates, securely bolted to a backing of oak ten inches thick, on vertical timbers. The outside plates to be three inches, and the inside two inches thick; and all plates and appendages to be of first quality wrought-iron scrap, capable of sustaining a tensile strain of 55,000 pounds per square inch.

Each tower will have one port hole cut in its side for a gun. This hole is to be twenty-four inches wide and forty-one inches extreme hight, top and bottom to be semicircular. In the roof is to be a grating composed of wrought-iron six inches deep and one inch wide. Each tower rests on twelve wrought iron conical rollers, eighteen inches diameter, seven inches width of face, turned and polished, and with steel axles, to work in a wrought iron railway secured to the deck at every eighteen inches of its circumference.

On the outside of the tower, the base, to the height of twenty-six inches above the deck, is to be a glacis or inclined plane, extending ten feet in every direction from the circumference of the tower itself, and composed of two plates, each one and a quarter inches thick, fastened on proper timbers. This glacis will protect the railway on which the tower revolves, with its machinery.

The sides of the vessel are to be plated with four and a quarter inch wrought iron plates, except for thirty feet from the sternposts, where the plates are but three and three-quarters thick. The deck is to be covered with ten thicknesses of rolled iron plates, each three-quarters of an inch thick, and not less than fifteen feet long and three feet wide.

The entire weight of iron plates needed for one of these vessels is thus estimated in the specifications:

	Tons.
Plating on sides	221.0
Plating on deck	248.2
Plating for glacis for two towers	40.5
Plating for two towers	136.3
Roofs for two towers	17.3
Decks for two towers, &c.	48.6
Total	691.6

The motive power is to consist of two horizontal direct acting engines, to work two screw propellers, one under each counter of the vessel. The screw propellers are to be four bladed, of ten feet diameter, and with a mean pitch of twelve feet six inches.

The gun-towers will each be worked by an oscillating engine. For ventilating the berth deck there are, besides these, to be four blowing engines and blowers.

The Situation at Port Royal.

[Correspondence of Philadelphia Inquirer.]

PORT ROYAL, Monday, Feb. 10th.

Everything here presents the appearance of a thriving seaport town. Civilians constitute no small portion of the population. White ladies, a short time since, excited much attention, but now they are abundant; as many officers and civilians have brought their families with them. Numberless buildings are being erected, and a splendid and substantial dock, 1200 feet long, is nearly completed; also, an immense hospital built, in the form of a hollow square.

The contrabands are enjoying themselves hugely; most of them making money by selling sweet potatoes, oysters, fish, &c., to the soldiers. Fine oysters sell at ten cents per quart. The weather has been very fine, with scarcely any rain, and that at night. As an illustration the soldiers go in swimming daily.

Recently, in company with some friends, I visited Beaufort. All along the river are deserted houses, where the slaves of the plantations live and revel on their masters' property. The beauty of Beaufort has not been overrated. The houses are large and elegantly furnished, the streets lined with live-oaks, with festoons of green moss hanging from their branches, and the large gardens filled with orange trees and ragrant flowers.

The Provost Marshal has stored away all the pianos and finest furniture. The officers of the army occupy the houses on the bay, and those further back are tenantless and free for the investigation of curious strangers as are also the plantation houses for miles in the interior.

The troops are encamped in beautiful orange groves back of the city.

The men who are to remain on the transports are not allowed to land, except in small squads. They have had no change of linen or flannel; and, as rations, nothing but hard crackers and salt meat. The water which they drink was brought from New York four months ago in whisky and venegar barrels, and is said to be almost putrid.

Whisky sells at Beaufort and Hilton Head at $18 per gallon; matches, 25 cents per box; sweet potatoes, 5 cents per dozen; butter 75 cents per pound, and so on.

A letter dated Pittsborough, Miss., Jan. 20, and addressed to "Dr. Darrah, Fort Henry, Col. Brake's regiment," has the following important item of information:

F. G. Enochs got home from Jackson, and brings very bad news concerning the condition of our Southern Confederacy. He says Col. Blithe was sent down to Jackson by Gen. Polk, to inform the Legislature of the condition they were in, and their danger at Columbus, in order that the Legislature might inform the people of Mississippi. Generally they (rebels at Columbus) could not give the people information of their condition through the papers, because they would give it to the North. They have only 12,000 men at Columbus, and they have a force of about 110,000 to contend against. In a few days there will be a call for 20,000 troops in this State, the time of the 60-days troops having nearly expired. J. M. Steele was at Jackson, Tenn., the other day, and was ordered to Columbus—he had but eight men, the balance all being sick. He sent the eight men and staid home with the sick. J. C. STEELE.
