The Winter Fire-side at Home.

As our country is filled with public schools, academies, and colleges, offering opportunities of extended study to all, there is danger that some of the best agencies for correctly forming the minds and hearts of the young will be neglected. Do we all realize the power for good that may be exerted in this direction by a right use of our association around the winter fire-side at home? A world to the young on this subject.

If you follow very closely the customs of society, you will spend entirely too many of your winter evenings in frivolous amusement. You will thus lose an opportunity for educating yourselves that you will find nowhere else. You lose, in the first place, the proper cultivation of the domestic affections. Nothing more beautiful can this earth show than a little band united by the ties, not only of kindred blood, but of strong and tender domestic affection. But this affection will not attain its full growth or show forth its mature strength unless cherished. Now, can it be properly cherished, if the hours most appropriate to it, are wasted in alien circles, among those who care nothing for us except as our presence increases the gaiety for which they seek? The home affections and home virtues are among the greatest needs of society, and they thrive only in the atmosphere of home.

In the second place, you lose the opportunity for extended reading, which you will find alone at home, through the long evenings. This is an age of intelligence, and he who does not read can not keep abreast of his time. He must read, and read with care and thought, or the advancing mind of society will part company with him. If a young person labors through the laboring months, he has neither time nor strength for this reading. If he attends schools, his school hours are occupied with school books. The reading which gives extended information, must then be done at home, in the quiet evening hours or never.

Hugh Miller read by the winter fire-side of a Scotch home; and when he afterwards became a public man, he was recognized as being one of the best informed men in Great Britain. Our own American history is full of such examples, and we often offer to these examples the tribute of our praise and admiration. But the only proper tribute that can be paid to a good example is imitation.

Young men and women, if you will deny yourselves excessive amusement, and excessive indulgence in social gaiety, you may nourish around the fire-side of home, home virtues and affections worth more than any society accomplishments; and you may become intelligent and well informed. If you will not, you may go on, and have for a few seasons what you call "a gay time," and then subside into that obscurity to which society assigns those who lack in earnestness and intelligence. You may have a few years of over-strained, unnatural enjoyment, and then, for the rest of your lives, live that dull, unsatisfactory life all ways lived-by those who have no inner source of support and happiness.

A very fair choice is offered you, and I hope that not all will choose unwisely. J. W. DAVIS, Rio Grande, Jan. 1, 1880.

The Supreme Court of Maine, in concluding its opinion upon the Garcelon frauds, employs language that is of general application. It says: "This Government rests upon the great constitutional axiom that all power is inherent in the people. It is a Government of the people, by the people, for the people, and if administered in the spirit of its founders, it shall not perish from the earth." Its Constitution was formed, to use an apt expression of one whose memory is embalmed in the hearts of its countrymen, "By plain people, and 'plain people' must administer it. The ballot is the pride as well as the protection of all. It is the truest indication of popular will. The official returns required from the municipal officers of the several plantations, towns and cities, are and will be made by plain people, and made, too, in the hurry and bustle and excitement of election. They are not required to be written with the scrupulous nicety of a writing-master or with the technical accuracy of a school-boy. Sentences may be ungrammatical, spelling may deviate from recognized standards, but returns are not brought to naught because the penmanship may be poor, language ungrammatical, or spelling erroneous. It is enough if the returns can be understood; and if understood, full effect should be given to their nature. When they are accurately ascertained, there should be no hesitation in giving it full effect."

OUR SUPERSTITION.

"What Old Ladies Say Are the Signs."

The following superstitions, handed down by tradition, are yet fervently believed in in many parts of America:

White specks on the nails are luck. Whoever reads epitaphs loses his memory.

To rock the cradle when empty is injurious to the child.

To eat while a bell is tolling for a funeral causes toothache.

The crowing of a hen indicates some approaching disaster.

When a mouse gnaws a hole some misfortune may be apprehended.

He who has teeth well assunder must seek his fortune in a distant land.

Whoever finds a four-leaf trefoil—shamrock—should wear it for good luck.

Beggars' bread should be given to children who are slow learning to speak.

If a child less than twelve months old be brought into a cellar he becomes fearful.

When children play soldier on the roadside it forebodes the approach of war.

A child grows proud if suffered to look into the mirror while less than twelve months old.

He who proposes moving into a new house must first send in bread and a new broom.

Whoever sneezes at an early hour either hears some news or receives some present the same day.

The first tooth cast by a child should be swallowed by the mother to insure a new growth of teeth.

When a person enters a room he should be obliged to sit down, if only for a moment, as he otherwise takes away the children's sleep with him.

The following are means of death: A dog's scratching on the floor or howling in a peculiar manner, and owls hooting in the neighborhood of the house.

Domestic harmony must be preserved when washing day comes, in order to insure fine weather, which is indispensable, as the ceremony is usually performed out of doors.

Billingsisms. The man who gets bit twice by the same dog is better adapted to that kind of business than any other.

Man is a curious creature; nothing will discourage and disgust him more than to give him all he asks for.

Truth is like the sun; though it sinks out of sight, it always rises again in "an splendour."

Gratitude is one of the noblest, and also one of the rarest passions or sentiments of the heart.

Poverty is no curse for extravagance; a pauper had rather have one feast than three square meals.

The multitude praise those who are at the top of the ladder, without asking how they got there.

All that I know of good luck or bad luck is this—our good luck we attribute to our shrewdness, our bad luck we charge over to somebody else's account.

The man who is anxious on all occasions to tell all he knows is pretty sure not to know all he tells.

Every one expects to be remembered after they are dead, but very few can truly tell for what.

Flattery is an evidence of a craven spirit; we never flatter those whom we respect.

Young man, watch your opportunity, and when you see it, lay violent hands on it; it is sure to come once, and may not come the second time.

The most remarkable result of General Grant's journey around the world is still to be recorded—it has caused General Edward F. Beale to go to church for the first time in nearly twenty years.

Before the rebellion the Beale family used to attend St. John's, the most aristocratic church in Washington, and naturally went largely of Southerners.

The rector sympathized with the majority of his parishioners, and one Sunday, about the outbreak of the war, went so far as to pray for the success of the rebel cause. This was more than Gen. Beale could bear, and he marched out at the head of his family, registering a vow that he would never go to church again. But Grant came to see him, wanted to go to church Sunday morning, and his host was constrained to accompany him.—Washington Letter.

Nature: It is thought that a crisis in the history of Vesuvius is approaching; either there will be a great discharge, such as will terrify the neighborhood, or, as is more likely, there will be an overflowing of lava, covering the cone with a mantle of fire, and silently inflicting more destruction on property than a grand eruption. Vesuvius has been in an active state for several years, and his host was constrained to prophesied that the eruption would consist in the overflowing of lava.

REASONS WHY STOVES Should be bought at the Gallipolis Eagle Foundry,

2d st., below Public Square.

First.—Because they are made in Gallipolis, and every citizen should encourage the home manufacturer.

Second.—If repairs are needed the plates can be procured immediately at less trouble and expense.

Third.—We warrant them to give as good if not better satisfaction than the higher priced stoves.

Fourth.—Because prices cannot fall to suit.
