Zingg was hitched to a farm wagon loaded with milk cans and in some unknown manner, while Mr. Zingg was in the creamery, the team became frightened and started at a lively rate of speed for the city. A great deal of damage was averted by their running onto the mile stone near F. Bauman's saloon, and freeing themselves from the wagon. Strange to say they only threw out one milk can and did no serious damage, only breaking harness and wagon slightly.

Was Republican Doctrine
Promulgated at Fort Meigs

To a Large Audience on Saturday Last.

The Republican Senatorial rally at Fort Meigs last Saturday was a great meeting. Owing to the fact that the weather was so threatening all the morning, and the rain of the forenoon, many people remained at home who would have otherwise attended the meeting, but notwithstanding the weather, large crowds came to hear the speeches and become acquainted with the Senatorial candidates.

The speeches were postponed until afternoon when Chairman Hunter called the meeting to order and introduced Hon. C. P. Griffin as chairman.

Mr. Griffin made a brief speech in which he scouted the idea that he could possibly refuse to support any or all of the Republican ticket. His Republicanism was not of the sort that would permit him to sulk or fall to do his duty because he had suffered defeat. But on the contrary he was at his post of duty and referred with much earnestness to the fact that it was a great pleasure to be present and assist in the meeting. His remarks were loudly applauded and his friends were more proud of him than ever, while his political enemies were compelled to acknowledge his ability and power.

He introduced Hon. Asa W. Jones, Republican candidate for lieutenant governor, who made one of the best speeches of the campaign. His audience listened attentively to his powerful speech.

The arrival of ex-Gov. Foraker escorted by the Lincoln club and Leon's band was the signal for great applause, and at the conclusion of Jones' speech chairman Griffin introduced the gallant soldier-statesman who entertained his audience with an able speech full of convincing arguments which were applauded and appreciated by the large audience.

It was a great day for old Fort Meigs and the Republicans of this Senatorial district.

Just prior to the introduction of Gov. Foraker, Hon. John Hankey, Hon. John Vogt and Hon. T. J. Harbaugh were introduced to the audience.

FORT MEIGS

AS A NATIONAL PARK.
THE VISITING EDITORS

Heartily Endorse the Plan and Regret the Already Long Delay

Among the many articles published by the newspaper representatives who visited Fort Meigs recently, the following sketch taken from the Toledo Sunday Journal, although somewhat long, is worthy of re-publication, from the fact that it goes a great way toward reflecting the charge made by a few pseudo editors, who through a spirit of narrow mindedness and jealousy, attempted to convey the idea that the meeting of editors was only for the purpose of advertising Toledo.

I am sure the generous public of Toledo will heartily agree with the Press Club in its attempt last week to bring closer together the editors of the three states which are largely tributary to Toledo. The meeting of the editors of Ohio, Indiana and Michigan, which was held here Monday last is certain to inure to the benefit of this city, as well as to make the fraternal feeling among the newspaper men more general. But over and above what may happen to the men engaged in newspaper work, and quite beyond what is to be gained for Toledo, is the paramount matter of creating a general and widespread interest in the operation of a National Park on the site of Fort Meigs. It is a shame that we of Toledo sit so supinely by while there lies just on the river above us a spot which is so historically renowned.

On the banks of the Maumee, directly opposite Maumee, and but a short distance above Ferrysburg, is the site of Fort Meigs. Here, less than one hundred years ago, rested really the domination of the Northwest Territory, out of which we have since carved many an empire and but for which, and the deeds of the gallant men whose bodies now smolder unmarked and without sign of recognition, this great west, now so important a part of this great nation, would have doubtless remained under foreign domination. Fifteen hundred unmarked graves are now waiting recognition on the hither banks of the quiet river which runs by our doors. Over these graves cattle graze, the summer winds toss the grass and the heroes lie thus without the slightest recognition on our part of their valiant deeds. This is monstrous, and most unpartic. On the sight of Ft. Meigs there should be carved marble and bronze; the hillsides should be dotted with marks of where brave men died; a grateful nation should take in charge the resting place of these patriots and make lasting illustrations of how a republic can be grateful, and the people of a free land remember those who died that all might be free. In other lands, where kings and nobles suck the life blood of a patient people; where standing armies constantly menace the working man, and tax heavily every effort of honest toil, great monuments tower, and stately effigies show where rest the bodies of men who have achieved renown. In Berlin, in Paris, in London these monuments, abundant and those who have written their names large on the pages of history have recognition. With us the same matter begins to have recognition, and Gettysburg, Atlanta and Chickamauga testify in what manner a republic recalls brave
