Greenbacks and High Prices.

The Impression is gaining ground that Congress in compliance with a recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, will provide for a gradual and steady funding of the floating debt, and a regular withdrawal of greenbacks, with a view of contracting as rapidly as possible the National Bank issues. This is a result generally desired, as it is conceded that the present high prices of all articles showing to the inflated currency. During the war the opinion was expressed that when the contest ceased prices would be reduced. But the war has terminated, and there is no reduction.

Few expected that at the end of a season unusually productive, and in the midst of peace, they would be compelled to pay higher prices for all articles used in the family than they paid during the war, when gold was at two hundred and fifty, and rising. But they are compelled to pay higher for everything, and, as a matter of course, will sustain any movement calculated to bring figures to a legitimate standard.

The Detroit Free Press, in appealing to the business and working men of the nation to join in compelling Congress to strike at the root of the evil, and remove the principal cause of the high prices, the inflation of the currency, says:

"If the people who are affected by these prices will not unite in saying the word, Congress will not dare to refuse, early in the session, to remove this inflation, which is the heaviest of all our taxes. Not only does it keep up prices, but by its uncertainty and fluctuation in the price of gold, it renders it impossible to do business with certainty—the margin of uncertainty must always be against the consumer, and the superabundance of currency stimulates speculation and compels every man to charge an exorbitant profit in self-defense. Congress can cure this. Congress can contract currency till it and gold assimilate in value. Congress can restore specie payments; and when Congress does this it will accomplish all that we can ever again hope to see done, and that is not to get back to old prices, but to restore the equilibrium between wages and living. Therefore what we really want is a return to a specie standard, with a reduction of circulation to the needs of business—when we will again realize the comfort, so well known of old, called "good times," and mankind can judge at the commencement of the year how he will come out if he pursues a certain course."

These are sound views. So long as the state of our currency compels us to pay excessive prices for all articles of home consumption we shall be shut out from equal competition in the markets of the world. The development of the vast resources of the country is being seriously retarded by the effects of an inflated currency. Congress, at an early day, should apply the remedy.

Securing the Public Debt.

We observe among the proceedings of Congress, a resolution offered by Mr. Randall, of Kentucky, which was adopted—years 102 says 1—to the purpose that "the public debt created during the late rebellion was contracted on the faith and honor of the nation; that it is sacred and inviolable, and ought to be paid, principal and interest, and any attempt to repudiate, or in any manner to impair said debt, should be universally discontemned by the people, and promptly rejected by Congress if proposed."

It is to be feared that the devil has been whispering to Mr. Randall, who is an individual of no remarkable stability—that he is in danger of becoming a repudiator. This is the kind of tribute which men pay to their own integrity when they begin to lose confidence in it; a sort of obituary notice, bearing testimony to virtues upon the point of dissolution.

We hope that the public creditors—especially those who remember the resolution several years ago passed with such unanimity by the same body, that this war is not waged for the preservation of the Union, and what followed it—will take great courage from this solemn pledge of our National Legislators, and that our public securities will go up accordingly. The thing most to be wondered at, now that swearing is so much in fashion, is that the mover of the resolution did not propose to put the members of Congress under oath never to vote for repudiation. This would have fixed things beyond a peradventure.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Crime in New York City.

The last annual report of the New York Metropolitan Police Commissioners is a voluminous document. It shows that there were last year 68,573 arrests made. Of these 48,754 were males and 20,119 females. The table of nationalities show that 21,852 white and 1,184 black natives; 33,857 Irish; 7,833 German; 2,819 English; 901 Scotch; and 639 French were arrested. The crimes against the person were greatly in excess of those against property. Of the whole 68,000 nearly 54,000 were in the former category. There were 35 arrests for murder, 197 for assaults to kill, 78 for rape and attempts at that crime, assault and battery 6,623. Arrests for intoxication figure up over eleven thousand. The largest number of the arrested were between 30 and 40. The married were about 30,000, and the unmarried 38,000. It is somewhat remarkable how large a number of them could read and write. This number is stated at 51,600. Such a fact shows that literacy and crime are neither necessarily nor even extensively connected; and that something besides the power to read and write is necessary to make moral men and orderly law-respecting members of the community.

A Wind Fall.

E. M. Bruce, "late member of the Confederate Congress," and now a banker and cotton-factor in Augusta, Georgia, has presented General John C. Breckinridge a check for $100,000.—Commercial.

If it were not for the fear of being charged with dilatory, by BEX. BUTLER, we would be inclined to congratulate JOHN C. on his good luck.

TELEGRAPHIC SUMMARY.

A New York paper says General Hooker, commander of the Department of the East, is dangerously sick of erysipelas in the head. He has a few days been in a doubtful condition, though his symptoms are now more favorable. He has no visitors, and no business is allowed to trouble him. A letter from Richmond says there is considerable excitement in that city over the report that General Hunter is shortly to become military commander there. Many persons think his anticipated assumption of command in Virginia, is in some way connected with the intended trial of Jeff. Davis.

A letter from Fort Monroe says the larger portion of the rebel rans, Merrimac, was successfully raised on the 5th, and towed to Portsmouth Navy Yard.

Boston, December 7.—John Gallagher, the keeper of a drinking saloon on Washington street, got into a difficulty last night with some persons and fired a pistol at one of the ball instantly killing a young man named Collins, who was walking with a lady on the opposite side of the street. Gallagher was arrested.

At Indianapolis, on Thanksgiving Day, the mayor and a large number of the citizens of that city were in procession to the corner-stone of the new Jewish temple, and a great gathering of Jews from all parts of Indiana. An eloquent oration was delivered by Rev. Dr. Lillenthal, of Cincinnati, followed by a very appropriate address by Hon. P. C. Dunning. The cost of the new edifice is estimated at $40,000.

SAN FRANCISCO, December 6.—Articles of association have been filed by a Company to build a railroad from San Francisco Bay to a town in San Diego, thence eastward to the State line, and thence connect with the contemplated road to the Mississippi. The capital is thirty millions, and the length of the road seven hundred and twenty miles.

Augusta, Ga., December 6.—General Grant and staff arrived here to-day, and will leave for Atlanta to-morrow.

Gold and Currency.

A correspondent of the New York Evening Post, writing upon the above subject, uses the following sensible language: "I think that I can suggest a simple and safe way to bring our currency back to a gold value. The sole cause of the premium on gold, now that the war is over, is the excessive amount of our paper money. The size of the premium indicates the degree of this excess. It is an invariable rule in political economy that if you force upon a commercial community a larger amount of circulation than the business of that community requires, the whole volume of such circulation will sink to the value of the amount actually wanted. The paper money now in circulation amounts in round numbers to nine hundred millions, and the premium on gold is in round numbers fifty per cent. more per in circulation than the country requires. The amount required to carry on all the business of the United States is apparently at this time six hundred millions of dollars. But we have nine hundred millions. What has followed? The nine hundred millions are worth only six hundred millions. You can buy the whole nine hundred millions for six hundred millions of gold this day. Should Congress in the wisdom pass a law at the approaching session to increase the number of National Banks so as to add three hundred millions more paper money, the value of the currency would sink to fifty cents on the dollar, and the premium gold would rise to one hundred per cent. I trust that you will excuse me for using such title and well known rules in finance and political economy, but there appears to be no such connection of ideas on the part of recent writers on this subject, that I think I am justified in repeating them. I now come to the remedy, which is simple and effectual. First—Let Congress resolutely abstain from authorizing any new issue of paper money. Second—Let Congress instruct Mr. McCulloch to cancel and destroy in each and every month, out of the receipts of internal revenue, or from other sources, eight and one-third millions of greenbacks. This proceeding would diminish the volume of currency at the rate of one hundred millions a year, and thus in three years the whole amount of circulation would be reduced to six hundred millions, or to the actual amount required to carry on the business of the country. Whenever this result shall be reached, gold will cease to bear a premium, and our banks will be convertible at pleasure into specie. A regular assumption of specie payments by the National Banks would then be so simple a matter that it is unnecessary to describe the details. What ever remained outstanding of the Government greenbacks would be received and paid out by the banks on a par with their own bills, and thus the whole currency of the country would be redeemable in gold. The effect of the gradual withdrawal of the excess of the currency would be most salutary. A moderate stringency would prevail throughout the whole period, without any sudden or severe pressure. The banks would lend with caution. Speculators would draw in their operations. Stock gamblers would find it no longer possible to carry heavy amounts of securities and every part of the commercial community would take in due preparation for the storm that was apparently approaching. But a commercial crisis that is fully prepared for by every one never comes, and thus we should be spared the violent revulsion that usually follows a return from a depreciated to a sound currency."

THE LITTLE FALLS TRAGEDY.—We yesterday printed the details of the bloody tragedy at Little Falls, in which a Mr. Walrath, wife and daughter were slaughtered. A coroner's jury has investigated the affair. Proceeding to the chamber where the body of Mr. Walrath had been discovered, a jug stained with blood and partially filled with liquor was found in the corner of the room. In the mean time, the money, checks and other valuables had been discovered in the house in an undisturbed situation, and the jurors were forced to the conclusion that, in a fit of temporary insanity, probably induced by indulgence in liquor, Daniel Walrath had dragged both wife and daughter from their beds and murdered them in the human manner which was described by the United States yesterday.

Probably, infuriated at the realization of the deed he had committed, or maddened by liquor, he had, with the cunning characteristic of an insane man, arranged his own death in the manner we have described. The funeral took place yesterday morning. The occurrence of the tragedy had caused immense excitement in Herkimer County, and the funeral of the deceased family was largely attended.—Rochester (N. Y.) Union.
