PATENT CLOG PREVENTIVE.

THE INVENTORS, W. J. M. BATCHELDER and C. LEIBER, obtained a Patent for this invention on the 13th day of March, 1866.

Inventive genius has added a new triumph to the vast number of valuable improvements in agricultural implements, and once more the Farmer has occasion to render thanks to the noble-hearted mechanics who have done so much of late years to render the labors of the husbandman less laborious and repulsive. All farmers have been greatly annoyed by the choking of their plows with stubble, clover, weeds, stalks, &c., and have felt that a device by which the plowing could be done without the necessity of stopping the team every rod or two, ank kicking away the choking material, would be of great advantage.

THIS HAS BEEN MOST PERFECTLY ACCOMPLISHED BY A VERY SIMPLE DEVICE,

Which can be readily attached to any plow, and by the use of which the accumulating material is readily removed by a lever attached to the plow-handle. It is a practical invention, and is received with the greatest favor, and will sell readily every-where.

Persons desiring to purchase territory, will please address BATCHELDER & LEIBER,
