JAMES HARNELL'S SONG.

O, there above, yon heather hill, Where foots' combs but rarely...

His burlly laugh made men rejoice, His words the neighbors guided...

He was na' loud, he was na' proud, He lacked in learnin' sairy...

He's dead and gone, this price o' life, Mute is his burlly laughter...

CHORUS. O up and down an' rovin' an' rovin', And o'er the 'hale world fairy...

The following lyric gem in the Nursery is from the pen of Laura E. Richards:

ROBBLY-BOO AND WOLLYPOTPOP. Robbly-boo, the King so free, He used to drink the Mango tea...

THE HOUSE OF THE JAMES BOYS IN BLAIR COUNTY, MO.

An Impregnable Cabin in the Midst of Woods—The Midnight Assault by Detectives—Why the Bandits Went to Northfield.

[From the Chicago Times.]

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Oct. 15, 1876.

Recently I visited the home of the James boys—a farm house in Blair county, about three miles from Kearney, an obscure station on the line of the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad...

When I entered the house, in company with an old gentleman well-known to the family, I first met the wife of Jesse James, who had come over from Kansas City that day.

She is not handsome. Of rather graceful figure, her features are irregular, her mouth large, and her general appearance that of a woman from the lower walks of life.

Mrs. Samuels, the mother of the highwaymen, proved to be an exceedingly intelligent old lady, who talked freely of every subject but her sons, and where they were, and insists that the persecution they and the family suffered during the war is the cause of their being outlaws.

The expedition of Captain Nares was supported by all that money and scientific ingenuity could suggest. Men, vessels, equipments, provisions and all the apparatus for rushing against the obstacles surrounding the way, were of the best quality.

The chief benefit which promises to arise from Captain Nares' recent effort to discover the great "Northern Passage," is the contribution of the coast-line knowledge which he will make for the use of geographers and future expeditions.

Captain Nares also discovered that at the eighty-second parallel all animal life and the migration of birds ceased, thus proving, as he says, the "impracticability of continuing an effort to reach the pole."

The house is constructed like old-fashioned block houses, small holes being left through the logs, out of which guns can be fired at an attacking party; it would be dangerous to tackle the boys inside of this dwelling and some bloody work would be sure to follow.

The friends of the James boys—and they have many through this section—are delighted at their escape from Minnesota. They repeat, with evident pride, that the Jameses can never be caught like the Youngers were—alive. They will fight as long life lasts, they say.

was considered a bad man. Wherever he went in those days, even though the war and its troubles were over, he carried a pair of navy revolvers, and he would not hesitate to use them either. His reputation was that of a desperado, without the generous nature of those dashing knights of the road, and who would shoot as quick as he would drink.

Their career has been a successful one, and they had become a terror in this State. The real cause of the robbers going to Minnesota has never been told. When the detectives made the raid on Mrs. Samuels' house they consulted an attorney at Liberty—a town near by—and he furnished them assistance.

KANSAS CITY, Oct. 17.—All parties who know the James boys in this vicinity declare that the prisoner at St. Louis is not Frank James. Mrs. Samuels, the mother of the boys, told a relative here not to be alarmed; that Frank and Jesse were safe.

THEIR FIRST BANK ROBBERY. AND PERHAPS THEIR FIRST MURDER. [From the Boonville Advertiser.] Living in Kansas City, a respected and wealthy merchant, in Mr. Greenup Bird, an old resident of Missouri and one of the best men in the State.

But the James boys and Younger brothers were unknown as dashing highwaymen in those days, and a party immediately started in pursuit. They chased them to the Missouri river, and there overtook them. A running fight ensued, but the robbers escaped, and from that time forward until they murdered the cashier of the Northfield bank, followed their daring calling with success.

LATEST FROM THE ICEBERGS. The opinion prevails that the late British Polar expedition has been a practical failure. Dr. Isaac Hayes steps in the midst of his busy life, in New York, to say that such is the case, and as a veteran Arctic explorer he should know whereof he speaks.

But Pierre, seeing that she is determined to denounce him, is about to kill her when they are both startled by knocks at the door, and the voice of Louise outside calling "Mother, mother." Bernard having heard that Pierre proposed to sell Louise into degradation, comes with his son Andre and the Baron de Marsan, Prefect of the Seine, to demand an explanation.

BOSS SHEPHERD'S CONTRACTS. The Man Who Used to Sell Pies in the Post Office Tells an Interesting Story. The Hon. Pat O. Hawes was then introduced, and made a ten minutes speech, which will not soon be forgotten.

BRUTUS BLINKENBERRY. "Brutus Blinkenberry" said that gentleman's wife, drawing a paper from her pocket in the privacy of the chamber on Sunday morning, "Brutus Blinkenberry, I've counted, and out of the last thirty days you have come home intoxicated twenty-seven nights; What do you think of yourself?"

'ROSE MICHEL'

The story of the play as presented is as follows: Louise Michel, the daughter of Rose and Pierre Michel, is an apprentice in the employ of Master Bernard, a wood engraver, with whom she is living.

At this announcement there was tremendous yelling and laughter. Pat turned around and said sotto voce: "What the h—! are you laughing about? I don't see anything so funny." Pat then went on to say that he went down to Washington and presented himself to Boss Shepherd.

Pat went to the committee, but they would give him no money; saying that Nebraska was all right, and would go Republican anyhow. Pat then wrote back to Hitchcock and told him the result, but also said that if he [Hitchcock] would get him a contract from Boss Shepherd for street paving, he would get all the money he wanted.

At this announcement there was tremendous yelling and laughter. Pat turned around and said sotto voce: "What the h—! are you laughing about? I don't see anything so funny." Pat then went on to say that he went down to Washington and presented himself to Boss Shepherd.
