TONIGHT
V-I-T-A-G-R-A-P-H
The Men Haters Club
A bright summer comedy. Magnifi cent scenes. Superb acting. The girls vowed they would never love or marry, but the awful young men brought them to terms.
Also other good pictures.

Easy Money.

Two Coney Island waiters were talking about short changing.

"It's bad to take a raw chance," said one, "because you never can tell what will happen if you're caught. The best picking I ever had I didn't take any chances on. I was selling tickets at a fifteen cent attraction. Every time a guy shoved in a two dollar bill for one or two tickets I counted out carefully 5 or 10 cents in silver too much. If he bought two tickets I'd lay out 80 cents in silver. Nine men out of ten would grab the change and beat it, thinking they had beat me out of a dime. They seldom remembered that I had a dollar more to give them they were in such a hurry to get away with my dime.

"The tenth man who didn't fall for the game was generally honest enough to shove my dime back, so I seldom lost anything. I made $10 a day besides my pay, all without taking a chance."—New York Sun.

What They Intend to Do.

"I hear," said Mrs. Oldcastle, "that Mr. Goodman intends to leave his fortune for the purpose of founding some kind of an eleemosynary institution."

"My good gracious!" exclaimed her hostess as she tried to pick a chunk of paint from a genuine Rembrandt. "Why should he want to do that? I think if he didn't want to leave it to his family he'd give it to charity. That's what me and Josiah intend to do with most of ours."—Chicago Record-Herald.

JOHN T BRUSH

John T. Brush, the chief proprietor of the Giants who announced recently that if he found the public and the newspapers wanted a post season series between his team and the Yankees he would take up the proposition. There is no doubt the New York fans want the series and it has been known for some years that such a program would be agreeable. For some reason there has always been a balk at the end of the regular season when it seemed just on the eve of taking place. The Polo Grounds in New York will be filled to bursting if Brush and Frank Farrell, owner of the Yankees come to an agreement.

THE SCHEME OF THINGS.

A Boy Nods Over Geography and Dreams of Restaurant Feed.

WESLEY'S uncle had a bald head and a quiet voice and might have been justly called prosaic, but to Wesley he was invested with a peculiar and romantic interest because he lived in a hotel and ate regularly at a restaurant. Wesley thought that any one who ate at a restaurant every day had little left to sigh for in this world. They had ice cream every night at a restaurant and batter cakes every morning for breakfast. In Wesley's home they had ice cream for dinner on Sunday only, and batter cakes appeared on Thursday and Friday mornings. At these times batter cakes were like sunrise and sunset—natural phenomena. But batter cakes every morning—that was like the sun rising at bedtime or school in August, utterly unheard of and not possible anyway. Why this should be the scheme of things was a step beyond Wesley's imaginings.

His mother was chiding Wesley's uncle for eating at restaurants.

"I could eat in a restaurant forever and ever!" cried Wesley.

"Some day, my son," said his mother, "you may have to eat at a restauraht."

Even twisting the warning into a promise, this was empty for Wesley. It was quite likely he would be a railroad engineer. He had determined to be that. But to eat at a restaurant was not a matter of volition; it was a privilege. He had no idea how it was secured, but in a despondent way he felt that it would be denied him.

Still, in spite of all, dreams are pleasant, and pretty soon the map of England slipped away somewhere and Wesley was seated in a great restaurant with shining mirrors, reading a bill of fare. There were batter cakes and two kinds of sirup and boiled eggs, which they would bring already opened in little goblets—omelet with jelly, too, at the same time, and oranges and bananas and apples and jam and pickles over on the side. All he had to do was to point out these things to the courteous attendant standing beside him and he would bring them to him.

Then there was dinner to be ordered—raw oysters and oyster soup and clams (he didn't know which he liked the most), olives, turkey, duck and 'sparagus, and then a confused stretch of all the things he liked until he came to where it was plainly printed that he could have chocolate ice cream and strawberry ice cream and vanilla and all kinds of pie and three kinds of pudding. And then there would be 'sorted cakes, which meant lady fingers and macaroons, and little cakes with a cherry in the frosting. And he would never have to eat any liver or boiled rice or hashballs ever.

As the vision faded and the map of England suddenly came back under his elbows, looking like a queer rooster, Wesley sighed. Anyway, if he ever did eat in a restaurant he wouldn't come to his sister's house every Sunday for dinner, where they had only one kind of everything. Still, Sunday would be the best day to come, for then they would have ice cream.

His uncle was saying good night. Wesley allowed him to pinch his nose without the usual protest, and with wistful eyes followed him out of the room. He was going to have batter cakes in the morning, on a Tuesday! They would have only white bread because it was ironing day.—Harper's Weekly.

Something Worth Weeping For.

The old gentleman who had seen better days picked the yelling urchin out of the gutter.

"Come, come!" he said. "What's all this trouble?"

An attendant youth volunteered the explanation:

"Please, sir, 'e's lorst 'is glarss alley a-playin' marbles."

"Well, don't cry," soothed the O. G. W. H. S. B. D., patting the still sobbing youngster on the back. "Here's a penny for you to buy some more."

The tears burst forth afresh.

"I wouldn't cry if I were you," urged the benefactor.

"Y-y-yes, yer would," gasped the weeping one, "if you'd b-ben an' lorst yer farver's glass eye."—Answers.

Man With Gun (at bank window)—I'm the dead shot of the gulches. Hand over that money.

Cashier—Really, you must be identified. It's our rule. (Robber gets cold feet and beats it.)

Too Much Light.

"Well, Uncle Ben, it seems awfully nice to have you here with us. I'm so glad you could come, and I hope you intend to make us a nice long visit. I suppose you are all tired out after riding in the sleeper all night. If you feel sleepy remember that you can go to your room at any time and take a nap. You are to do just as you please here, you know."

"Thanks, I guess I will lie down awhile if you don't mind. I think I could of slep' all right if it hadn't been fer that durn electric light they had goin' right up in the corner of my bunk. I tried hangin' my sock over it, but it got so hot I was afraid things might ketch a-fire, so I just had to let the thing shine, and I never could sleep wuth a cent unless I could be where it was dark. But I s'pose you city folks git so used to havin' things lit up all the time that you couldn't git along without havin' the lights on all night."—Chicago Record-Herald.

A Prediction.

"What are you going to be when you grow up, Tommy?" asked the clergyman while waiting for Tommy's mamma to come down into the parlor.

"A orphan," said Tommy proudly.—Harper's Weekly.

THE RUBBERNECK DAMES.

GOOD Mrs. Maloney and Mrs. Fanoni
And Mesdames Zabrisky and Jones
With Mrs. M. Rosenbaum lived in a stony
Old flat house of five floor zones.
One over another, each opulent mother
Would dangle her gay dishabille
Out of window all day in the hot July smother
And talk, parlez, sprechen and spiel.

And I, who was dwelling across from their yelling,
Quite pitied their families' fate.
When the husbands were fed there was surely no telling.
I know the poor kids never ate.
Their "mas" did their dining while carefully twining
Their necks through their neighbors' front panes.
They hung from those sills, on pink cushions reclining,
Through storm, darkness, sunshine or rains.

One day a delightful and, I'm convinced, rightful
Misfortune befell the five dames,
For Mrs. Maloney—I hope I'm not spiteful—
Fell out of the top window frames.
She fell on the frisky young Mrs. Zabrisky,
And Mrs. Zabrisky fell, too.
And ere Mrs. Jones saw the journey was risky
She'd joined the aerial crew.

They paused for the tony old Mrs. Fanoni,
And on Mrs. Rosenbaum's ear
They landed, all four, and, without acrimony,
I felt my deliverance near.
But the sun in his glory conciliatory
Had "rubbered" the asphalt so right
That each rubberneck bounded back to her story—
We're laying rock pavement tonight!
—Chester Firkins in Puck.
