Police Strike Trail.
San Francisco, Oct. 4.—The police of San Francisco are almost positive that the three men giving the names of Leonard, Morris and Bryson, who purchased 500 pounds of dynamite from the Giant Powder plant at Oakland on September 24, are responsible for the dynamite blowing at Los Angeles, including the bringing up of the Los Angeles Times.

Attorney Earl Rogers and Detective William Burns, who are here investigating this case, learned today that the three men in question anchored a launch at Sausalito from September 21 to 23 and that on the night of September 22 they gave the vessel a new coat of paint. On September 23 the detectives learned, the three men went to an aluminum goods store in San Francisco and purchased two sets of name plates bearing the name "Peerless." The next day the three men in the launch, with the name "Peerless" very clear and distinct on the side of the launch, appeared at the Giant Powder company's plant and purchased 500 pounds of dynamite.

Burns and Rogers are both convinced that the night of September 24 the three men again changed the name of the vessel and possibly painted it over in order to throw the police off the scent. No launch going under the name "Peerless" is known on the bay and the authorities are now working on the theory that the missing launch is still in this vicinity under another name.

Burns and Rogers found further confirmation of their theory when residents of Alviso, which is on the extreme lower end of San Francisco bay, reported today that they saw a launch answering the description of the missing vessel enter Alviso Slough on the afternoon of September 25. The launch tied up at a wharf and three men were seen aboard. They remained quiet during the afternoon and early evening but near midnight they were seen to unload their cargo and place it in a wagon or automobile observers could not tell which.

At daybreak on September 25, three men and the launch had disappeared. It is believed that the launch is beached somewhere in the marshes. The police theory is that this was the launch which took on dynamite at the Giant Powder company's plant on September 24, that the cargo unloaded at Alviso was dynamite and that the explosion was taken by automobile to Los Angeles via San Jose.

A United Press launch today began a search of the marshes near Alviso for the missing launch "Peerless." Several residents of Alviso saw the mysterious launch and three men on September 25, and all declare that the descriptions of the vessel tally with the description of the launch which took the tree men to the Giant Powder company's plant.

Many Are Detectives.
Los Angeles, Calif., Oct. 4.—The most widespread search for criminals in the history of the West is on today, following the announcement of rewards aggregating $1,000,000 for the arrest and conviction of the man or men who blew up the plant of the Los Angeles Times. Thousands of persons are engaged in the search and it is believed certain that if the guilty are still within the borders of the state their capture is inevitable.

The offer of huge rewards has served to increase the excitement in Los Angeles which immediately followed the fire and about every fourth man in the city has turned sleuth. The tension was added to by the announcement of Chief of Police Galloway that within a few hours he expected to have one or all of the men responsible for the dynamiting under arrest. While Galloway would not say so, it is practically certain that he places most of his faith in the San Francisco clew pointing to three who purchased 500 pounds of dynamite from the Giant Powder company at Oakland on September 24.

This clew is generally conceded to be the most promising yet discovered. The three men, two of whom gave the names of Morris and Bryson, and the third, whom it is said to be known as Leonard, have vanished absolutely since the Times explosion, and the launch Peerless in which they placed the dynamite after purchasing it, has also disappeared. No further word has come today from Attorney Earl Rogers, representing the Times, and Detective William J. Burns, who are in San Franisco working on this clew. Nearly every other large city on the Pacific coast has also reported a clew most of them apparently worthless.

Miss Margaret Rutherford now in Paris in whom Kermit Roosevelt is so interested beyond the point of simple cold friendship.

The coroner's inquest is in session today, but is not expected to get down to any real work until the search of the ruins of the Times building is completed.

Meanwhile, heavy guards continue on duty about the homes of General Otis, general manager of the Los Angeles Times, President Zeehandelaar, of the Merchants' Manufacturers' association and a number of public buildings.

Postmaster Harrison has recently received letters warning him that the postoffice would be blown up and this structure is also under guard. General Otis is accompanied by a personal bodyguard wherever he goes.

Subscription Started.
Washington, Oct. 4.—The National Press club today opened subscriptions for a fund to aid the families of newspaper men killed in the explosion which destroyed the building of the Los Angeles Times.

Hunter Sees Boat.
Agnew, Calif., Oct. 4.—Tom Hurley, a hunter, asserted today that a launch answering the description of the launch in which dynamite was taken from the Giant Powder plant on September 24 was abandoned on September 26 on Indigo Mud flats, six miles north of Alviso, in the marshes. He asserts that he saw empty dynamite boxes in the launch.

West Point Men Set Free But Still Remain Anxious.
By United Press Wire.
West Point, N. Y., Oct. 4.—Although freed after nine days' confinement and arrest for "silencing" Captain Rufus Longan, the one question that agitated the West Point cadets corps was whether they or the military officers of the academy have won a victory.

Following the arrest of the corps for "silencing," every cadet positively refused to divulge to the court of inquiry the reasons or the names of those who instigated the episode. This put the entire cadet corps in practically a state of insubordination.

While the freeing of the cadets from arrest looks like a victory for them, it will not be definitely known until the court of inquiry makes its report whether or not such is the case. Should the court have succeeded in discovering who the instigators were, and should it ask that severe punishment be inflicted upon them, the cadets admit they will come off the worse for the encounter. This will not be known for several days yet and the court has not summed up the evidence it has secured. The freeing of the cadets from arrest came last night. Orders were issued for every member of the corps to assemble in the gymnasium. When all were there the doors were locked and General Barry in full uniform and surrounded by his staff, gave the cadets a heart-to-heart talk on military discipline. Then they were freed. The cadets at once gathered on the campus and cheered for ten minutes until they happened to remember that the finding of the court of inquiry might still mean severe punishment for a score or more of them, when the cheering ceased.

Following the freeing of the cadets, the coaches at once began work to whip the football team into shape. The scrape of the cadets has put the team back nearly two weeks in its practice and prospects for a good showing this season are considered dubious.

Association Convened Thirty-sixth Annual Convention at Los Angeles. Mayor Gives Address of Welcome. President Pierson Thinks Well of European System For Preventing Political or Speculative Control of Banks—Meeting is of Great Importance.

By United Press Wire.

Los Angeles, Calif., Oct. 4.—An attack upon the postal savings law featured the opening session of the thirty-sixth annual convention of the American Bankers' association which convened here today. The attack was made by President Lewis E. Pierson, in replying to the addresses of welcome delivered by George Alexander, mayor of Los Angeles, and W. H. Holliday, president of the Los Angeles clearing house.

Pierson declared reports had reached his ears that there is being exerted political pressure to use the newly created bank for individual benefit, "repugnant to all principles of good government."

President Pierson urged a uniform system of bank accounting as the best aid to the state and national bank examiners. He also urged that some system be devised whereby the true value of commercial paper might be learned by banks before purchasing it in the market.

In the matter of currency reforms, Pierson favored the European custom, preventing the control of banks from passing into the hands of a few, by giving each stockholder but one vote, no matter how much stock he held. This, he thought, would prevent political or speculative control of banks, would insure better management and would keep undesirable men out of official positions in banks.

He urged many technical changes in the matter of reserves, re-accumulating and currency issues and demanded of congress a proper revision of the banking and currency system. "In every other nation of the world," he said, "a banking and monetary system, leading up to an institution of discount and currency issue, has demonstrated its beneficial influence in keeping business conditions steady and stable by conservatively controlling the expansion of credit through its rate of discount and automatically increasing and decreasing the volume of note issues with the requirements of the trade."

United States Senator Theodore E. Burton of Ohio, who is being persistently talked of as the probable successor of Woodrow Wilson as the President of Princeton University.

The reason for the rumor is hard to find, as the Senator's friends point out that he is not a Princeton man to begin with, and that his ambitions are political rather than scholastic. In fact some of the Senator's closer friends declare the story was started by political opponents, many of whom would like him to resign. The fact remains nevertheless that he is being constantly talked of as Dr. Wilson's successor.

He is able to be about the house all right, said she, "but his no desire to be interviewed. He has not been in any hospital and we do not know where he started that he was fatally hurt."

The countess arrived today from Chicago. Her father was responsible for the story that his son-in-law had been fatally hurt and was in a hospital. This report, following on the heels of another story that the count and countess had had a bitter quarrel and that the former had told his wife that he was going to leave her forever caused a sensation among friends of the pair in this city.

Police headquarters were asked to locate the injured man and every hospital was visited while the Hotel Belmont where the family formerly stopped and several of the clubs were secured for information. Finally it was learned that the count was in the lodgings which he occupied when he first came to this city. After he had refused to see interviewers, a friend of his said that there had been a "slight misunderstanding" between the count and his bride and that he had sent word to her of the accident in order to get her to come to this city to see him. If this was his object he was successful as when the countess arrived she showed by her attitude that she was very badly worried and hustled into a waiting automobile at the station and was rushed to the apartments of her husband.

Beyond admitting that she had passed a sleepless night she refused to be interviewed and when questioned regarding the report that she and her husband had separated in Chicago said the story was a "cruel lie."

Later in the day one of the count's business associates said that the accident took place not in Central park but in Van Cortlandt park. According to this informant, the count was thrown clear over his horse's head and landed heavily against a tree. He was rendered unconscious and was taken to his apartments and Dr. S. S. Kelle summoned. He was also said to be more seriously hurt than Dr. Kelle refused to make any statement regarding the extent of his patient's injuries, saying it was no one's business but the members of the family.

ALABAMA MOB SLAYS NEGRO

Four Hundred Infuriated Men Avenge Assaulted Woman.

By United Press Wire.
Mobile, Ala., Oct. 4.—An infuriated mob of four hundred men took Rush Withers, a negro, from the jail at Andalusia, Alabama, today and burned him at the stake. The negro had assaulted Mrs. Hiram Stuckey, of Andalusia.

Withers, who was a trustee at the Henderson convict camp, was dragged from the jail pleading for mercy. He was kicked and beaten and then dragged along the ground to the public square where he was chained to two pieces of pine and logs of wood piled around him and set on fire. He was quickly burned to death and the body reduced to ashes.

The mob gathered as soon as it became known that Mrs. Stuckey was seriously injured and demanded that Withers, who had been placed under arrest be turned over to it. For a time the jailer refused but finally a committee of relatives of the injured woman called on him and told him that if Withers was not turned over to them they would carry the jail by storm. The negro was then surrendered and the lynching took place.

Count Fatally Hurt, Wife Broken-hearted.

Search Fails to Find Alleged Dying Man.

Mystery Surrounds Entire Tale—Is Believed That Couple Have Separated—Story of Dying Condition Unproven—Count is Man of Varied Career—Works as Laborer to Win Bride.

By United Press Wire.

New York, Oct. 4.—Carefully secluded in his apartment on Thirty-first street Count Mourik De Beaufort waited today for the arrival from Chicago of his bride of a few months the daughter of M. H. Kilgallen, the Chicago steel king. All efforts to see the count were useless, a stalwart w man who announced that she was his landlady and "an old friend of the family" standing guard at the front door and refusing to permit anyone to get beyond the vestibule door.

The report that the count was "dying" as a result of a horseback accident in Central park, was denied by the landlady who said that it was true that he had been thrown from his horse but that beyond a "skinned nose" he was unharmed.

"He is able to be about the house all right," said she, "but his no desire to be interviewed. He has not been in any hospital and we do not know where he started that he was fatally hurt."

The countess arrived today from Chicago. Her father was responsible for the story that his son-in-law had been fatally hurt and was in a hospital. Kelle summoned. He was also said to be more seriously hurt than Dr. Kelle refused to make any statement regarding the extent of his patient's injuries, saying it was no one's business but the members of the family.

New York, Oct. 4.—Following the vigorously denied reports that Count Mourik De Beaufort, son-in-law of M. H. Kilgallen, of Chicago, and his helpess bride have separated, there came a mysterious rumor today that the count is dying somewhere in New York, after an accident sustained at Central park yesterday while riding horseback. The report reached New York from Chicago and was told in circumstantial detail.

Despite the apparent authenticity, however, of the Chicago story, the New York police have found no trace of the "dying" man, nor have any of the larger hospitals reported him as among their patients. Neither has the count been living at Hotel Belmont, where his father-in-law told the Chicago reporters he had been making his home. The Chicago story also said the count was being treated by Dr. Louder. No such physician is known in New York.

On the heels of all these denials, Kilgallen added to the mystery by refusing to tell in what hospital the count is a patient. When seen in Chicago last night, preparatory to coming to New York, the millionaire steel man was in tears. He declared most positively: "The count is dying and the countess is dying of grief."

Count De Beaufort has had a varied career. He served in the Dutch army for six years. Then he came to America determined to woo and wed an American girl. He fell in love with the beautiful Miss Kilgallen and at once determined to become the American business man. Donning jumpers and carrying a dinner pail, "Jack" as he was known by the men in the steel plant, toiled for several months as a laborer on the payroll of his father-in-law to be. When he had grasped the details of the business, Kilgallen consented to the marriage and made the count his business manager in New York.

Mrs. Fred Ginnett, who has furnished what is estimated to be a most important clue in the trial of Dr. H. C. Crippen in London, for the murder of his wife Mrs. Ginnett was a close friend of Dr. Crippen's wife, Belle Elmore, whom he is accused killing and burying in the cellar of his London house. She now declares that when Belle Elmore was in Philadelphia eighteen years ago and underwent an operation and a long scar was left by the surgeon's knife, Mrs. Ginnett declares that when this information is given to the London surgeons who examined the body found in the cellar they will positively identify it as Belle Elmore. She is sending details abroad about the case.

Managers of Big Auto Race To Kill Few As Possible.

By United Press Wire.
New York, Oct. 4.—The officials of the motor cups holding company today declared that every human agency possible would be called into service on Saturday October 15, in an effort to eliminate deaths and accidents from the Grand Prix automobile race to be run over the Long Island parkway.

Instead of starting at daybreak, however, the race will start at 10 o'clock.

The race management will endeavor to have Governor Hughes order a regiment of state militia to police the course.

It is understood certain of the supervisors of Nassau county, some in favor of revoking the permit to hold the race, but hesitated when notified that the county would be sued for damages. The race management contended that the permit to hold the race amounted practically to a franchise and a revocation would lay the county liable to a damage suit. The agent for the Benz cars has notified the motor cups holding company that unless prompt action is assured the race drivers and the spectators, the three Benz cars will not be permitted to start.

Pittsburg, Pa., Oct. 4.—Whirled about a shafting at 100 revolutions a minute then catapulted across the room when his clothing ripped, Henry Grau, twenty, an engineer, had a miraculous escape from death today in the North Side plant of the Swift Packing company. He is in the Allegheny General hospital with a two-inch ribbon of scalp torn from the forehead to the base of the skull, his arms and legs broken and internal injuries.

Grau was adjusting the mechanism about a shafting when his jumper caught in the belt. Hospital physicians say he has a chance for recovery.

Officials Ask State to Furnish Machine Gun to Bombard Home. Part of Outlaw's Family is With Him—Sheriff and Deputies Are Bluffed—Afraid to Serve Warrant. Trouble of Long Standing.

By United Press Wire.

Winter, Wis., Oct. 4.—With armed deputies still guarding Winter and scores of women surrounding the log cabin of John Dietz, the outlaw of Cameron Dam, fighting and possible bloodshed is expected today in the long standing feud between the authorities and Dietz.

Myra Dietz, the twenty-three-year-old daughter of the outlaw, is at the point of death in a hospital at Ashland, as a result of a gunshot wound inflicted by deputies when the girl and two of her brothers were ambushed last Saturday. One of the brothers is held in the Winter jail, wounded. The other escaped and joined his father at the cabin.

Following the ambush Dietz sent word to Winter that he would visit the town and shy every man responsible for the shooting, but the warfare is being pushed into its territory. Thomas Whitten, chairman of the county board, said today that he was considering asking the governor for a machine gun to aid in driving the outlaw into the open. With Dietz in the cabin are his wife and three children.

Dietz first ran afoul of the authorities several years ago when he became involved in a controversy with a lumber syndicate. He claimed the homestead on which his cabin stands through an alleged agreement with the lumber company securing the aid of the law in dislodging him.

There is no doubt but that Dietz has the sheriff and his deputies "bluffed" and some feeling has been manifested over the methods used in attempting to dislodge him. Deputies have talked with Dietz and traveled with him, but none have had the nerve to serve one of the numerous warrants they carry.

Whitten advocates taking the negotiation to a hill some distance from the cabin and calling Dietz to surrender. Upon a refusal he would shell the house with the machine gun.

The daughter Myra has won the sympathy of the entire neighborhood. After being shot through the back, she was bundled into a wagon and driven five miles to Winter before medical aid was secured.

She was then placed in the baggage car of a train and started for a Hayward hospital.

Bill Dietz, an uncle, changed these plans. There has long been ill feeling between Bill and John Dietz, but the shooting of Myra caused Bill to rush to the family's aid. He boarded the train on which Myra was being guarded at Blechwood, and at the baggage car was confronted by six deputies with leveled rifles.

Dietz is a physical giant and he brushed aside the guns, knifed into the girl, kissed her and burst into tears.

The deputies then told Dietz that they were taking the girl to Hayward. He said he had decided to take her to Ashland and to Ashland she went, although her parents do not know her whereabouts.
