THE GOLDEN GIRL

Plans For The Fair
The tents of the gypsies showed blue against the evening sky. Here and there the form of one or two of the women could be seen bending over the camp fire which crackled merrily and sent up its smoky, satisfying announcement to those members of the clan who were still on the drows (road) or by the banks of the river, that sunset had come and the goodly stew was nearly ready for every hungry Romany chie and chial so partake of.

The Romany chie
And the Romany chie
Shall jaw tansuier
And cook the gey
Of the farming rye—

sang Miguel in a deep, happy voice, as he came slowly up the drom leading to the dingle. A song which he loved despite the fact that it was anything but proper from the conventional point of view, for it told lightly of the gypsy lads and lassies going to poison the pigs and bewitch the horses and cattle of the far west. Not a choice sentiment, to be sure, but when sung by the handsome young chief in his rollicking voice of a wonderful evening at twilight, it was to be admired.

Wiping the sweat from his brow as he came up to the vog (fire) Don Miguel smiled a smile of great physical satisfaction as he sat himself down upon a mat and pulled out his friendly pipe.

"A wild day, Dye," he said to an old woman uttering about among the pots by the side of the fire. "Aye, a wild one and not a cent to show for it. The Gorgios are very tight with their money and promissies nowadays, Dye. We must sell some of the horses at the fair to-morrow. Three of the chies (girls) can tell fortunes for the crowds and the Princess Ionna shall dance. Then all will be well."

Here he lighted his pipe and drew in two or three deep, contented breaths as the soothing smoke curled in and out of his mouth and nostrils and a feeling of gradual relaxation stole through his body.

"Dye," he called lazily to the woman near him, "fetch me a dipper of water for I am near dead with the thirst. Where are the chavies this evening? It is still as the grave here, and what are the women about?"

"Busy," said the old one, taking a dipper from the ground and hobbling away to get the water.

She soon came back with the clear, cold water for her chief and he threw his head back greedily as he slaked his thirst from the kindly dipper. "Fine, Dye, best water in the world." This done, he sat smoking in perfect contentment looking about at the peaceful scene before him with glad eyes. Once he was interrupted in the midst of his reveries by the sound of cries and got up to find out what was the matter. As he made for the particular tent from whence the cries were emerging, he heard a woman's voice say, "Someone is coming," and as Don Miguel came up to the place, panting, a huge naked brown body and black head was thrust out of the tent. It was the head and upper part of Jasper, the rom (husband) of Roselle, the new mother, and he shook his head gloomily at his chief, as Don Miguel asked him the cause for the cries within.

"She's bad," very bad, and frets at the touch of the child's lips so," he said with a tragic look in his dark eyes. "The dye's sure that she'll not last till morning—and there's no doing anything with her, Miguel."

SUGGESTIONS
This is a good way to poach eggs.—Place a large spoon in a pan of rapidly-boiling water. Slide egg into spoon, and after cooking an instant, gently slide into bottom of pan. This always prevents the egg from sticking to the pan.

Peanut Butter Variations—1. A can of best peanut butter, add an equal amount of hot water, but of salt, one tablespoon of good oil, cook, stirring constantly. Result: A creamy peanut butter.
2. Mix with best grade of peanut butter an equal amount of tart, un-sweetened apple sauce.
3. One can of peanut butter equal amount of olive oil (or good substitute), mix. Result: A rich, soft peanut butter.
4. Add an equal amount of mayonnaise salad dressing to peanut butter.
5. One-half pound peanut butter, one tablespoon each of prepared mustard, catsup and oil. Mix.
6. Mix an equal amount of thick strained honey and peanut butter. An excellent spread for bread.

KITCHEN KINKS WORTH REMEMBERING
A cloth moistened with champhor will remove white spots from furniture.
Zinc should be cleaned with soap-suds and salt, then polished with kerosene.
The most effective method of cleaning an iron sink is to rub it well with a cloth wet with kerosene oil.
Rub the nickel trimmings on stoves with kerosene oil and whitening and then polish with a dry cloth.
A little white sugar dissolved in hot water makes a good stiffening for delicate laces.
