SUPPLEMENT.

A BURSTING BOILER.

How It Looks When a Locomotive is Blown Up.

"I am one of the very few persons who ever saw a locomotive blow up," remarked an old railroad man to a reporter the other day.

"Like many other accidents, the one I saw was the result of carelessness—low water in the boiler—for the engine had just come from the shops and was in complete repair.

"Both the engineer and the fireman were killed, and the locomotive was fit for nothing much but the scrap heap when it fell to the ground.

HALL CAINE IN POLITICS

Novelist Makes His Debut In the Isle of Man.

WAS A RELUCTANT CANDIDATE.

Well Known Author Tells How Manxmen Elected Him a Member of Parliament—Says He Was Won Over by a Bold Device—Humors of the Contest.

Hall Caine, the novelist, writing from Greeba castle, Isle of Man, at the request of the London Mail, to relate his experiences and impressions of the contest which resulted in his election to the house of keys (Manx parliament), says:

"My propaganda was intended first to re-establish the credit of the island as to make the English public realize that, though the Isle of Man had been badly financed and was suffering the penalty of bad financing, its earning power was as good as ever—nay, better than ever—and that it might be trusted absolutely.

"Thus I proposed to unite the steamship, the railway and the electric tramway services, to promote state aid for the farmers on a system similar to that which has lately been proposed in Italy and recently established in Ireland and to help the fishing industry to a better market than it can now command.

"We have an upper house in our legislature, consisting of the island's officials, its deacons, law officers, etc., all appointed by the English government, but supported by the Manx people, yet unable of controlling our representative chamber, I proposed that this upper house should be re-constructed on an elective basis or perhaps even abolished altogether.

"Such, then, broadly and generally, was the programme I set before the Isle of Man. But the effect of my little propaganda was sufficiently surprising. Our island is conservative, and one-half of it was seriously alarmed. I fear this half was only able to discover in my schemes the sulphurous vapors of socialism. I was aiming at a Utopia and the setting up of a socialist state.

"Then came the contest. The honors of it were, I suppose, second cousins of all such things in greater communities. My opponent was a worthy man, better equipped than myself for the parochialism of much insular political business and in other ways more likely to be in his right place as a member of our house of keys.

"They conquered my reluctance at last by a bold device. Seven of them set out from Ramsey for Greeba at 11 p. m. on the night before the nomination, like so many electioneering highwaymen, and passed over the dark hills in the dead of night and in the midst of a blinding thunderstorm to capture their candidate. It was not in human nature to resist enthusiasm like that. I yielded to their generous importunities, accepted the leadership they offered me, and the big tussle began.

"A few weeks ago I opened a Catholic banner and by so doing displeased some of my Anglican friends. As a result some stalwart Protestant cried:

Vote for Hall Caine, the Roman Catholic! Not I, indeed!

A forthcoming trial at law arising out of the stopping of the publication of one of my novels in a magazine served as another weapon of attack where all was fair in love and war.

"Oh, indeed, see your dangerous state. And think of hell ere 'tis too late. When worldly cares would draw each thought, Pray call to mind that hell is hot; Remember and forget it not!

"The election is over, and I am glad and proud to be a member of the Manx parliament, and, being in it, I intend to do my best for my country and my people. For the present it is little I can do."

HORSE SHOW FEATURES.

Unique Decorations at a Famous Gotham Hospitality.

The Waldorf-Astoria hotel, in New York, honors the horse show with the most elaborate floral decorations of its history.

The visitor swings in his hansom into the driveway he will be confronted with a statuette hansom banked in chrysantheums and palms and yoked to a steed, blue ribboned, fashioned out of 250,000 leucantha leaves from the forests of South Carolina.

From the pillar capitals in the main lobby will depend fasciades in showers of the heads of equine wonders of former shows, each with his appropriate ribbon.

HOW LEE ENDED WAR

Would Not Keep Up Guerrilla Struggle After Appomattox.

IT WAS A MOMENTOUS DECISION

Charles Francis Adams Draws a Parallel Between Situation in South Africa and the Closing Days of the Confederacy—Paper Read Before American Antiquarian Society.

Charles Francis Adams in an address before the American Antiquarian society at Springfield, Mass., reviewed the history of Lee's surrender and compared the struggle of the south with the present war in South Africa.

The present seems to me a sufficiently proper occasion, and this a good place, to call attention to a matter not otherwise than germane to the purpose of this society. Historical in its character, it conveys a lesson of grave import.

My purpose, however, is to draw attention to the halfbreath escape we ourselves had from a similar experience now thirty-five years ago and to assign to whom it belongs the credit of that escape.

The decision rested in the hands of one man—the commander of the Army of Northern Virginia. Fairly reliable and very graphic accounts of what took place at General Lee's headquarters in the early morning hours of that day have either appeared in print or been told in conversation, and to two of these accounts I propose to call attention.

There is on file at the war department an application for a commission in the army from W. F. Crawford of Chester, S. C., bearing a long string of endorsements from prominent southerners.
