Montaigne's Chateau.

The upper room in the round tower of the chateau of Montaigne, in Perigord, is practically unaltered since the lord of the chateau housed his books there and wrote his essays. On the walls and on the ceiling are traces of the paintings that once adorned them. A visitor to the tower says in the London Globe:

"On the ground floor was Montaigne's chapel, above were his bedroom and private apartments, while on the third story was a beloved book room. 'There,' says the essayist, 'I turn over now one book and then another on various subjects without method or design. One while I meditate, another I record and dictate, as I walk to and fro, such whimsies as these I present to you here.' The walking to and fro seems to have been essential to production. Montaigne says his thoughts slept if he sat still. His fancy only went as his legs moved. Round the walls of the room stood the ordered ranks of books arranged upon five rows of shelves, while from the three windows the perpetual essayist could not only overlook his own family and household concerns below, but could let his eyes range over fine and varied prospects."

The Annual Spa.

A song of spring! Pray, who does not Appreciate the line Or say as she goes tripping by, "That lady has some class?" We all with one accord accord To her the fairest prize And whisper in a pleasant voice That she is just our size.

Some other seasons, we have heard, Are fairly well supplied With qualities which tend them charms That cannot be denied. Let others rave about the fall And wear it fume and fuss. We serve due notice that the spring Is good enough for us.

With cherry blossoms in her hair And blessings in her hand, She gently saunters down the road And smiles to lead the band. Then every one due notice takes, And every mother's son Who rubbers at her says in glee, "Ah, there, my pretty one!"

Yes, spring is all the Christmas cake, The candy and the pie. She worms herself into our hearts. She likewise takes our eye. We like to see her come around The verdure to renew, And, seeing her, we almost say She's too good to be true.

ONE SIDED.

The speaker in the meeting Has everything his way. The audience must listen To what he has to say. No one talks back or offers Suggestions to his face. Please tell us, then, why should he Not make with ease a case?

Not like a rough and tumble Discussed on the street Indulged in with a stranger To his pet line of talk. No, things are very different. For when he has the call It's up to all dissenters To go and hire a hall.

The man who holds the platform When he has paid the rent Can also hold opinions Of any twist or bent. There may be some objectors To his pet line of talk. And, while they have a recourse It is to take a walk.

They saw the air expounding Their viewpoint of the law. They mercilessly hammer Large cheated men of straw. They grill the ones who differ And put them on the rack. And win their case in triumph With no one to talk back.

Where It Would Help.

"You heard about the new noiseless gun?"

"Yes."

"I wonder if the principle could be applied to the man who is inclined to shoot off his mouth?"

Wanted, a Better Way.

"What is your recommendation for a social reform?"

"Mine?"

"Yes."

"Well, I think we should have a more direct, less painful and less cumbersome way of settling our business."

"What do you mean?"

"We first have to buy a little principle or dukeling at an enormous cost, don't we?"

"Yes."

"Then marry them to our daughters."

"Right."

"Then we have to divorce them at a high figure for settlement before the girls can be comfortable."

"I see."

There is no use in trying to dodge an issue, for issues are notably as nimble footed as Mercury and as persistent as Satan.

The reason some of us don't want to make footprints on the sands of time is because the style of shoes change so soon and we hate to be on record in an out of date model.

All things are possible to the man who has a future and many are impossible to the chap who has accumulated a malodorous past.

Fear makes us afraid, and the only grain of comfort lies in the likelihood that it makes the other fellow afraid too.

Sometimes a cynical disposition ends in a sin-ical exposition.
