School in the Jefferson institute began on the 25th ult. with a large attendance. Prof. Barzee, the principal, has made several important changes which makes the school first-class.

Miss Minnie Watkins is the first, and Mrs. Steel the second, assistants. The old institute has always had an enviable reputation as a seat of learning and this year is no exception to the rule.

Hop picking is a thing of the past at least for '93, and now the boys and girls are pouring in the school by the score.

There are more people now in Jefferson than ever before at one time. People are moving in to enjoy the privilege of sending to a good school, where the children will not have to wade a mile or two in muddy roads.

Prof. Davis, formerly of Albany, is now a resident of our city. The Prof. has organized a singing class of about forty members, and we are having "music every where."

This is getting to be quite a center for prunes, as there are some very large orchards near here, the fruit of which is now being shipped Eastward.

Farmers are very busy clearing up fall work getting ready for fall sowing. Although "hard times" is the general cry the people of this vicinity seem to be as prosperous and as well fixed as ever.

His Personal Experience.

Hon. James W. Husted, while serving his sixth term as speaker of the assembly of the state of New York, writes: "State of N. Y., Assembly Chamber, Albany, Jan. 16, 1890."

I desire once more to bear my testimony to the value of Alcock's Plaster. I have used them for twenty-five years past, and can conscientiously commend them as the best external remedy that I have known. Years ago, when thrown from a carriage and seriously injured, I gave them a thorough trial. In a very short time the pain that I was suffering disappeared, and within a week I was entirely relieved. On another occasion, when suffering from a severe cough, which threatened pulmonary difficulties, which I was recommended to go to Florida to relieve, I determined to test the plaster again. I applied them to my chest and between the shoulder blades, and in less than a fortnight was entirely cured. On still another occasion when suffering from an attack of rheumatism in the shoulder to such an extent that I could scarcely raise my arm, I again resorted to the plaster, and within a very few days the rheumatism entirely disappeared. I have them constantly by me, whether at home or abroad. My family as well as myself have found them to be a sovereign remedy, both for external and internal troubles. I never had but one kidney difficulty in my life, and the application of the plaster cured me in a week. I desire, as I said before, to bear my testimony in a public way to their efficacy, and I know of no better way of doing it than by giving you my personal experience."

Hood's Cures

She took two bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla and feels like a new woman." J. A. WHEELER, 1900 Division St., Baltimore.

The Owl in the Stove.

For several days it seemed to me that I heard something move in the stove, but I paid no attention to it. One night as I was going to bed the noise in the stove was so plain that I was sure there was something in there. I started to open the stove door, but it occurred to me that it might be a big snake, so I went and called my father. He came in with a cane and opened the stove and saw a big pair of eyes glaring at him, but it was too dark to see what they belonged to. He dropped a small piece of burning paper in the top and put in his hand and drew out a great big owl. His lordship looked at us as wise as if he knew everything in the world, but he acted very stupidly. After he had winked at us a few times, as you he was asking, "Well, what are you going to do with me?" we opened the window for him, and he hardly knew enough to fly out.—Harper's Young People.

Fans in the Time of the Pharaohs.

Fans were used by the pharaohs as standards in battle. They appear on the tombstones of Thebes, and Terener, the dramatist, who lived in the second century B. C., makes one of his characters say, "Take this fan and give her thus a little air." Fans have played their part in political history. In 1827 the dey of Algiers in an altercation with the French consul struck him with a fan which he carried. The circumstances were reported to Charles X, his sovereign, and the result was an expedition to Africa, the end of which was the deposition of the dey and the annexation of Algiers and its adjacent territory as a colony of France.—Washington Star.

Seeing Crime Through a Glass.

There is a mistaken belief in many rural districts that if one should see a crime committed through glass—that is, through a window, a glass door or even through spectacles—his testimony would not be accepted in court. There is about as much sense in this superstition as in the notion that one cannot touch the body of a murdered man without permission of the coroner. As a lawyer who has discussed these ideas said, "There is more law and less common sense in the lay world than any sane man would believe."—New York Tribune.

Why She Was Silent.

In a small company the functions and exhibitions of the Grand Army of the Republic are under discussion. Mrs. X—, whose domestic experience has not been happy, looks and remains reticent. "What, don't you believe in decorating the graves of the ex-soldiers?" demands one of the convives. "Oh, yes, indeed!" responds the lady. "Why, there is one ex-soldier's grave I would just dearly love to decorate." "Then why in the world don't you do it?" "Only because the man is not dead yet—he is my husband."—San Francisco Argonaut.

A Self-Possessed Bride.

At a recent wedding in Washington the bride showed more than the usual lack of trepidation. The church was filled with a brilliant company, and from the moment of her entrance she knew herself to be the cynosure of every eye, but she went through the ceremony as if being married were an everyday occurrence if not with positive disdain. The climax was reached when, leaning on her husband's arm, she passed through the doorway leading to the vestibule. Just inside the door stood a group of friends—young women who had arrived too late to be accommodated with seats beyond the ribbon. Posing on the threshold, knowing full well that every eye in the church was bent upon her, the bride deliberately leaned toward her friends and whispered loud enough to be heard by the bystanders, "I'll chaperon you girls next season."—Kate E. Thomas in Kate Field's Washington.

Swords of London.

There are four swords belonging to the city of London. The sword of state, borne before the lord mayor as the emblem of his civic authority. This is the sword which used to be surrendered to the sovereign at Temple Bar and when she came within the precincts of the corporation. The pearl sword, from the nature of its ornaments, which is carried before the lord mayor on all occasions of ceremony or festivity. A sword placed at the central criminal court above the lord mayor's chair. A black sword, to be used in Lent, on days of public fasts and on the death of any of the royal family.—Harper's Weekly.

SAW MONEY IN POSSUMS.

So He Halted the Express to Find Out if the Passengers Would Buy Any.

The regular passenger train was going west from Griffin and was about 40 minutes late. The engineer was trying to make up lost time and was running about 50 miles an hour when he was horrified to see about 200 yards ahead of him, just as he turned a curve before he got to Whitewater creek, a man on the track waving his coat across the track and over his head and seeming to be very much excited. The engineer, thinking of course that the bridge had been burned or fallen in, applied the airbrakes, reversed his engine and shouted to his fireman to jump. They both landed safely, and the train came to a halt so suddenly that it nearly unseated all the passengers.

"For God's sake, what's the matter?" asked the almost breathless conductor of the fellow who had stopped the train.

"Sam, for that was his name, answered: 'I jes' wanted to know of you wanted to buy some possums.'"

The engineer fainted, the fireman flew back to the engine, and the conductor looked all about for a rock or a fence rail to kill Sam with, and finally fell in his hip pocket for his pistol, fully intending to kill him on the spot, but he did not have his pistol and could not find anything to hit him with. He saw he was in it, and after a moment's reflection he told Sam he would take the opossums. The conductor intended to take all Sam's opossums and leave Sam without paying for them. So the conductor asked Sam where they were. The engineer had recovered himself, the fireman and about two-thirds of the passengers had got up to the engine by now and eagerly looked for Sam to bring in about a dozen big fat opossums, but Sam simply said to the conductor: "Waal, I hain't got um here, but these here big woods up here is jus' chuck full of um, and I will ketch you three or four and bring um down some time."

Four strong men lifted the limp and almost lifeless form of the conductor to the train.—Seneca Enterprise-Gazette.

"Ye" For "The." "Ye" for "the" is not now nor never was a proper form of expression. The word "ye," as it appears in all old books and legal documents, should always be pronounced "the," the "y" being only a corruption of the thorn letter, a symbol which stood in place of "th," and which was formerly used by printers when difficulties were experienced in "spacing out."—St. Louis Republic.

The River Menom. Menom, the name by which the river flowing through Bangkok is generally known, is applied by the Siamese to all rivers, "me" meaning "mother," and "nam" "waters," i. e., "mother of waters." The so called Menom river is called by the natives Menam Chow Payah.—Philadelphia
