—The Markland went up stream yesterday.

—The thunder shower at noon yesterday cleared the air.

—There are two Chinese steamers overdue from Hongkong.

—The State of California is due this morning. She has 478 passengers.

—There are sixty-two square feet of plate glass in the front of the Knights' new building.

—Regular convocation of Saints John R. A. M. Chapter No. 14, at Masonic Hall at 8 o'clock this P. M. Visiting companions are cordially invited.

—The Chinese bill was ready for the President's signature yesterday. It will make very little difference whether he signs it or not, it's bound to become the law of the land.

—The case of the sailor charged with desertion came up before Justice Fox yesterday afternoon. He was allowed to go on his own recognizance to appear again on Friday.

—Parnell, Dillon, O'Kelly and other prominent Land Leaguers have been released from jail, and the severe coercive measures of the English government are to be abandoned.

—In the case of Jas. McBride, charged with stealing clothes from the Occident Hotel, the defendant waived examination, and was bound over in the sum of $300 to await the action of the grand jury.

—The last issue of the Sunday Welcome has more spice and get-up to it than any other paper we have ever received from the metropolis. The fun is not a crushing blow from a mace but a keen lance thrust, and has some originality about it.

—The bill for the relief of William L. Adams of the amount charged against him on the books of the treasury, on account of the robbery committed on the steamer going to San Francisco many years ago, of government funds, recently passed the senate. At the time of losing the money, Adams was collector of customs at Astoria and was taking the funds to San Francisco to deposit.

—The latest thing in the way of explosives is the apparently harmless throat mixture. We hear of a case where a druggist in mixing a compound of chlorate of potassium and tannic acid for a gargle, had the compound explode and blow off the side of his jaw. The next thing in order will be for beef steaks and loaves of bread to fly to pieces and scare the consumers into fits.

—The protean artist that controls the local columns of the Oregonian is as fancifully fertile in fictitious assumption as Joe Emmet. One day he is "The Big Colt Editor," the next the "Growls-Editor, the next the "Salmon Editor," and in this last piscatorial character the facetiousness that runs through his make-up, as the streak of ore through the pay rock, stands out in fullest splendor. He says that if anyone catches a salmon that weighs 70 pounds or over, by forwarding the weight of the fish and the number of the boat in which the fish was caught, accompanied by the proper affidavit, that the Oregonian will publish the fact. Now that ante makes the game too high for ordinary players; it costs too much to come in. We'll make it 50 pounds, with a limit of 100, and all fish must be accompanied by three smaller ones, not necessarily for publication, but a guarantee of good faith.

—Music for the piano, organ, flute, violin, guitar, cornet, accordeon, banjo, fife, concertina and other instruments, just received at Adler's music store.

Landscapes and Waterscapes.

Some one who has had a little spare time at his disposal has been writing from here to the Chico (Cal.) Enterprise. His letter is a lengthy one and decidedly complimentary. We quote at length:

"Time was when this was the great ultima thule of geographers and travelers where "rolled the Oregon and heard no sound save his own dashings," and the noble Chinook who ate the festive clam was the sole inhabitant of these moist shores. But that has gone by. The Columbia of to-day is a busy stream, and floats to the sea the products of an inland empire, which halt at Astoria for final clearance ere going to those far-off foreign folk who pray for daily bread.

Astoria is, for its size, the busiest place in the United States, and is unique in several respects. Imagine a city with a municipal charter, a mayor and board of councilman, police force, lighted streets, schools and churches, public halls and all the rest of it, in which many of the dwellings and nearly all the business portion are built on piles driven into many feet of water. Under the foundations of the houses, between these piles, ebbs and flows the tide; (in a sanitary point of view this gives great facilities for drainage) and when it blows great guns from up the point, when the vessels heave and rock in the harbor, when it is dark and the wind whistles in the rigging, it would not require much stretch of the imagination, as one sees the twinkling lights of the ships and hears the great surge of the Pacific booming in the cellar, to fancy himself at sea. To those, too, who like the harmless amusement of fishing, such marine manner of abode is of daily convenience, as one can seek the seclusion of the cab—(no, the parlor) grants, and drop a line to a friend and the fish outside his window at the same time. Talking of fish suggests such a flow of statistics and piscatorial statements as would prove uninteresting to you. Fourteen hundred boats, in all the glory of blue and white paint, skimming over the Columbia and dotting its broad expanse with animated points, present a sight that cannot be seen anywhere else. These boats represent a "floating" capital of $200,000, and in them was caught last year nearly $3,000,000 worth of salmon. Each boat is manned by a crew of two, who think it hard times if they don't clear $100 a month each. They fish from April to September, and during those summer months the regular population of 4000 swells to 6000, of whom more and more remain every year.

I never entirely realized what lordly independence was till I wanted a carpenter here to do some work. It takes as much diplomacy and strategic movement to get one to put a door in a closet as it would to secure a foreign mission; and well it may, for the knights of the saw and plane have building contracts three months ahead. The growth of the city is only limited by the facilities of the mills to saw up the lumber, and such begging and praying to rent a house, you never saw. That performance generally winds up by the would-be lessee getting "mad," and taking steps to have a house built for himself. But if I go on you'll think I'm getting up a little "boom" for Oregon, so return we to our mottons.

Like all sea ports there is always a motley crowd of men along the docks; the hearty English sailor, the keen-eyed mariner from "down in Maine," the swarthy black bearded Spaniard, the stealthy, cat-like Italian, the snaky Kanaka, and the yellow-haired sons of Scandinavia come and go; an animated panorama. This is the gateway of a mighty country, the possibilities of which cannot be exaggerated, and one whose future is assured. 'Tis the heritage of a splendid class of men, sturdy, bold and enterprising, who are building up a great commonwealth in Oregon and that splendid scope beyond—our youngest sister—Washington territory. Commerce, the salmon fishery, lumber, coal, iron, fertile soil, never failing crops, and a determined community of go-ahead people are the great factors in the work of making this portion of our national domain second to none in wealth and greatness. Statistics just published officially show that for foreign exports for the month of February, 1882, New York stood first; San Francisco, second; and Astoria, third. "More need not be said; less could not be said."

Riding through Gen. Bidwell's grounds in '79 and '80 I have seen the skies that flush in crimson splendor to the north and west grow radiant in the violet light of sunset; to the east, "the dim Sierras far beyond uplifting their minarets of snow," glowing in rose and purple that gradually lifting into the sky above faded into gray and dusky hues that blended with the blue of night, and have thought that it could not be excelled. But an April afternoon on the Columbia river does, I think, show scenery that surpasses in beauty that of the Sacramento valley.

The river here is seven miles wide, sweeping with silent and majestic flow to the sea. On the north are wooded heights that serve as foreground for massive mountains that show their snow-capped cones as the fog wreaths momentarily part. On the river a swaying scarf of ever-shifting rainbows contrasts with the dark green pines to the east, while the white sails of the river fleet go dancing onward in the glittering mist, now radiant with prismatic tints as they cleave the rainbows that span the arch of the Columbia, and now gleaming in the afternoon sunlight as they make the shore. The extraordinary humidity of this atmosphere does not admit of that blaze of purple and scarlet that crowns the close of day in the canyons of California, but the softer tints of evanescent color gleam here with purer hue and fairer luster than in any other place ever saw.

From the deck of the Shubrick, commanded by the gallant Gregory, and bound for Tillamook, the scene is a grand one. As we near the ocean the sun sinks toward the promontory marked "Cape Hancock;" shadows are moving shoreward in the emerald water; ships crossing out spread their white wings and fly to sea, the black smoke of the steamers lies in lateral lines across the western sky, and amid the screaming of the gulls and the shouts of returning fishermen we hold our course for "the bar," where the great breakers toss their white foam as they curl and break in flashing fragments back to the green water. Here the river runs to the shoreless depths of ocean between banks of crimson fog that hang low on either side, and rising, change to clouds of orange vapor that float away with creamy fringes of lace-like drapery and range around the setting sun. Everything around and above is radiant in amber glow, the vessel rises on the swell of the Pacific, the sunset gun is fired from the fort on the hill, our flag goes up, the great yellow glare gleams out from the lighthouse, the clouds roll together, a gray mist settles down upon the water and we head for Tillamook Rock, which is a crag of basalt ten miles away with a lonely lighthouse thereon. We get there and effect a stormy landing.

* * * *

Just now we are engaged in the regular work of saving the country. Every little while this has to be done, and about the present time the hewgag is sounded and the tom-tom is beaten.

We elect a state ticket, county tickets, legislative, etc., in June, and to those for whom are set the bowls of party soup it is a season of fervor and exhortation. To the great mass of voters the occasion presents no features of enthusiasm. But little attention is paid to party lines, and but little regard is evinced for the party whip that the political leaders have long cracked over unwilling shoulders. People do their own thinking, more and more every year, and when election day comes round vote for the man whom they think best fitted for the place. Of course, on general principles, those of us who don't care to be forever kicking around among the skulls, want to see the Republican ticket elected. In general, politics in this neck of woods is—pinto.
