

FANSHER PASSES AWAY AFTER LINGERING ILLNESS

Lloyd W. Fansher, the Medford nurseryman who disappeared from Medford several years ago, died at Sacred Heart hospital early Friday morning. Mr. Fansher's illness had extended from the time of his mysterious disappearance but had only been serious for a few months. It was in a hospital in California that he remembered his identity and sent for his wife in Medford. Members of the family brought him to this city when it has been known that there was no chance of his surviving.

When Mr. Fansher left Medford he left no trace behind. It was known that he had walked south on the S. P. tracks and some of his private papers were found strewn along the right of way.

An unusually diligent search was conducted for months by relatives but until a short time ago no one could be found who had recognized him and yet he must have spent most of the time in California. Owing to the fact that his accounts were all straight and that there had never been any trouble in the family it was always conceded that Fansher's mind had given away, a supposition which proved correct. While in Medford he conducted an agency for a nursery company. He was a man of good education and had once been a county superintendent of schools.

During the past few weeks he has recognized members of the family and seemed happy that he had regained his mind although his health was gone forever. The funeral will be held Sunday afternoon from the Presbyterian church at Phoenix.
